PREFACE.

THE publication of this collection of the Stone and Copper-plate inscriptions of the Nellore district as it existed in 1903 has been rendered possible by the generosity of the Government of Madras under whose orders it was printed at the Government Press.

The work was undertaken in the belief that the records of a district situated as Nellore is would contain a lot of new matter of historical importance. This hope has not been realized. The great bulk of the inscriptions consists of grants to tanks and temples which are of no interest whatever and perhaps only one inscription (No. 26 of Kandukúr) can be pointed to as having a real historical motive. The collection supplies a few new historical names, mostly of only local importance, and fixes a few doubtful dates but of the condition of the country and the people in past ages it tells us nothing. In short the principal fruit of our labours is that we have saved epigraphists from wasting time on the exploration of a barren area.

2. The information supplied by the inscriptions being so scanty, the history of the district as revealed by them can be compressed into a few lines.

To begin with, it will be noted that records anterior to the twelfth century are rare. The wonder is, indeed, that so many have survived, having in view the indifference of the people to ancient remains. Nor are officials free from blame in this matter as is testified to by the old buildings of the Collector's cutcherry at Nellore in the construction of which inscribed stones have been freely employed.

The centuries subsequent to the eleventh are fairly prolific in remains, the thirteenth century being especially well represented.

The epigraphical history of the district begins with Copper-plate No. 24. This is a grant by the Western Chalukyan King Vikramáditya I in the seventh century. It records the gift of a village which has not been identified. Assuming that the grant relates to the Nellore district, we find in it an indication of the dispossession of the Pallavas from this part of the East Coast by the Western Chalukyan dynasty.

It is probable that the next glimpse of the past is obtained through No. 54 of Gúdúr which gives a Pallava king reigning over part of the district in subordination, apparently, to the Western Chalukyans. This inscription may be assigned with probability to the eighth century.

After this we seem to hear no more of the Western Chalukyans or of the main line of the Pallavas and for a long period we lose sight altogether of the southern part of the district. In the north, however, we have clear indications in the ninth and tenth centuries to show that it then formed a part of the Eastern Chalukyan dominions and towards the close of the latter century the Bána dynasty appears on the scene as is proved by a single inscription from Podili.

Another gap occurs at this stage and the records are silent until the close of the eleventh century when we come upon traces of the Chóḷas and their main line is not lost sight of until the second half of the thirteenth century. It seems to have governed through the agency of viceroys or petty chiefs, mainly of Pallava and Chóḷa descent, and most of the inscriptions relating thereto come from the southern part of the district. From the north the Eastern Chalukyan-Chóḷas were ousted by the Kákatíyas who, by the middle of the thirteenth century or earlier, had acquired Ongole, Podili and Darsi. Later on the borders of the Kákatíya kingdom were pushed farther downwards and only the extreme south is free from Kákatíya inscriptions. Early in the fourteenth century we lose sight of the Kákatíya dynasty whose authority was acknowledged by various petty chiefs of Yádava, Chóḷa and other lineages. After this, the northern part of the district fell into the hands of the Reḍḍi dynasty which ruled there from the middle of the fourteenth century to about the middle of the fifteenth. In this district its head-quarters seem to have been Chuṇḍi.

Meanwhile, in the south, authority appears to have been exercised by chiefs of Chóḷa descent, some of whom assume the imperial title and carry on the Chóḷa dominion into the fourteenth century. There are not wanting, also, slight traces of Pánḍyan sovereignty, one Pánḍyan inscription being so late as the close of the fourteenth century.

All these dynasties, in the north and the south, were absorbed by the Vijayanagar Empire, the first traces of which are found early in the fourteenth century and when Krishnadévaráya had expelled the Gajapatis of Orissa who, for a brief period, held a part of the district, the whole of Nellore seems to have acknowledged his authority. That was early in the sixteenth century and the district remained a part of the shattered Vijayanagar Empire until the middle of the following century, for it is not until 1640–41 that we find references to Abdullah Kutb Sháh of Golkonḍa and the latest Vijayanagar inscription is dated 1662–63.

The later history of the district need not be alluded to.

3. It will be seen that we have collected about 903 inscriptions. With one exception no inscriptions subsequent to the eighteenth century have been included; otherwise we may fairly claim that the collection is practically complete. The distribution of the inscriptions has been indicated in the accompanying map which distinguishes the places where Tamil inscriptions have been found. Mr. V. Venkayya contends on page 7 of the Epigraphical Report for 1903-04 that the prevalence of Tamil inscriptions in the south indicates that in modern times the Telugu language has extended southwards. The facts derived from the present collection are these :—In Súlúrpet out of 20 inscriptions, 4 are Telugu and all these seem to be comparatively modern; a similar remark applies to Venkatagiri where there are 5 Telugu out of a total of 27; Gúdúr has 118 inscriptions, of which 22 are Telugu and of these one is dated in the thirteenth century; Rápúr shows 67 Telugu inscriptions out of a total of 79 and some of the former are dated in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries; a similar remark applies to Nellore which possesses 64 Telugu inscriptions in a total of 124. Old Telugu inscriptions are thus not unknown in the southern part of the district, just as old Tamil inscriptions occur in such unquestionably Telugu taluks as Átmakúr, but, on the whole, Mr. Venkayya's conclusions seem to be correct, for it may be said as a general thing that Chóḍa or Chóḷa inscriptions are in Telugu in the north of the district and in Tamil in the south. The line of division between the two languages may, in the thirteenth century, have lain in the Nellore taluk but Rápúr seems to have always been Telugu. Now-a-days the dividing line roughly coincides with the southern boundary of the district. It may be mentioned that a few Tamil inscriptions were found at Pákála in Kandukúr taluk, but they are merely private grants.

4. It will be observed as one of the defects in this collection that the system of transliteration into English characters is not invariable. For example, the palatal 'S' is sometimes represented as 'Ṣ' and sometimes as 'Ś'. Such variations are a consequence of collaboration by several workers.

5. In Appendix I we have brought together to the best of our very limited ability the information available in respect of the several dynasties who have left traces of their presence. Other appendices and a glossary have been inserted for convenience of reference.

6. It remains to acknowledge assistance. In the first place we tender hearty thanks to Mr. Y. Venkayya, the acting Government Epigraphist of Madras, for help rendered to struggling amateurs. This gentleman most kindly transliterated for us nearly all the Chalukyan inscriptions and some of the others.

The transcription and translation of the Tamil inscriptions were done by M.R.Ry. T. P. Krishnaswámi Sástri of the Revenue Secretariat, and our thanks are due to him for the trouble he took.

In the working out of the Sanskrit inscriptions Mr. Venugópál Chetti was much assisted by the late Inguva Pattábhi Ráma Sástrulu of Ongole.

The exceedingly laborious task of transcribing the Telugu inscriptions fell mainly to the lot of M.R.Ry. Pólúr Venkatáchalam of the Nellore Local Fund Department, who also helped in the translation of some of them and did such Canarese work as there was. We take the opportunity to thank him.

We are also under obligation to Saiyid Mustafa Khán Sáhib, the Huzur Sheristadar of Nellore, for his kindness in dealing with the Persian inscriptions.

We must not forget to mention those also to whose lot fell the toilsome and uncommonly hot work of taking the impressions. They are the late Mailapur Krishnaswámi Mudaliar, Múchi of the Collector's office, Vemula Ádanna, Múchi of the Sub-Collector's office, and Fasi-ud-dín, Collector's dáláyat.

For assistance rendered by several of the Divisional officers, Tahsildars, Deputy Tahsildars and other gentlemen, we must express our obligation in general terms. We have acknowledged their assistance in, we hope, all cases in the body of the collection.

Finally we have to thank Mr. R. Hill and his successor Mr. T. Fisher and their subordinates of the Government Press for the care and skill shown in printing from manuscripts which were often well-nigh illegible.

7. A few photographs have been inserted in the collection. These were taken by Mr. Venugópál Chetti and M.R.Ry. V. Subba Rao, Minor Irrigation Overseer, and have been reproduced at the Survey Office.

8. Undoubtedly, in dealing with this mass of inscriptions, we have made many errors and we are fully conscious of our inability to do justice to the task we have undertaken. With this confession we hope to disarm the criticism of epigraphists.

POSTSCRIPT TO THE PREFACE.

Just as this book was about to issue, M.R.Ry. P. Venkatáchalam forwarded copies of three additional copper-plate grants. There being no time to incorporate and discuss them in the body of the work, the translations of two of them and an abstract of the third (all supplied, with his usual kindness, by Mr. V. Venkayya) have been relegated to a postscript at the end of the book (see pages 1421 a—e).

Of these the first inscription was found among the effects of a Sanyási and was secured by the Deputy Tahsildar of Addanki, from whose office it was sent to the Government Museum, Madras. It is, apparently, about to appear in Epigraphia Indica where it will doubtless be fully discussed.

The second and third inscriptions are in the possession of M.R.Ry. Nágarája Suryanáráyana Ráo Pantulu Gáru of Nellore, who kindly allowed facsimile impressions to be taken. Both these inscriptions relate to the village of Chandalúru in the Addanki division.

Our remarks about the Pallava and Eastern Chalukyan dynasties in the preface and elsewhere need modification with reference to these newly-discovered and ancient grants.

IN THE

NELLORE DISTRICT.

COPPER-PLATE INSCRIPTIONS.

Copper-plate No. 1. (A.D. 1390–91.)

[Parachúr grant of king Dévaráya. (S.S. 1312.)]

Note.

The subjoined inscription is edited from the original preserved in the Collector's office, Nellore. It consists of two plates, 9 inches long and 3½ inches wide, which are engraved breadthwise.

The characters are Telugu while the language is Sanskrit. No distinction is observed between short i and long i, nor between d and dh.

Mr. Sewell gives a summary of this grant in Vol. II of his Antiquities (No. 94, p. 15). Some of the verses have apparently been misplaced. Mr. Sewell does not seem to have noticed this and hence his inability to understand the grant.

The inscription begins with an invocation to Vishnu in his Boar incarnation (V. 1). Next V. (2) contains an invocation to Gaṇésa. Without any preface the name of Harihara is introduced in V. 3 and in V. (4) his liberality to Brahmans is praised; V. (5) says that Dévarája was the son of Harihara; V. (6) praises his valour. V. (7) states that he undertook a military expedition under the orders of his father and returned victoriously. In V. 8 it is stated that a minister gave a village to Chennu Bhaṭṭa, a Brahman, under the orders of Dévarája. Evidently no copper grant was issued by Dévarája, for the donee went to his son Rámachandra who was the lord of Udayádri (Udayagiri) and asked for a record of the boundaries of the village granted to him (Vs. 9 and 10).

Rámachandra made an enquiry and confirmed the grant (V. 10). The grant having been made by his father, the inscription is in the name of Dévarája; V. 12 and 13 record this fact. After obtaining his desire, the donee offered benedictions to the donor Dévarája and his son Rámachandra (Vs. 14 and 15); V. 16 states that the ṣlókas of this grant were composed by Ṣrí Devarája Miṣra the court poet of Rámachandra. The inscription closes with one of the customary imprecatory verses.

The object of the grant is a village measuring 15 manḍyas in extent, lying on either side of the river Audala, near Parachúr village in the kingdom of Addanki. It is understood that there is a river Audala between Guntur and Addanki. 'Manḍya' is some measure of land.

The donee was Chennu Bhaṭṭa, of the gótra of Bháradvája and of the Rig Véda. He is said to have been master of the Puránas.

The date of the grant is given as 'Ṣaka Rúpálayé.' Mr. Sewell says that this is unintelligible, but the system of denoting numerals by letters is explained on p. 79 of Burnell's Palæography where it is shown that r represents 2, p 1, l 3, y 1. Thus Rúpálayé = 1312, the digits being transposed.

The Harihara referred to in this grant must be Harihara II, and the Dévaráya referred to was his son Dévaráya I. The grant furnishes the information that Dévaráya I had a son named Rámachandra, who was appointed Yuvarája and lord of Udayagiri.

As regards the transposition of some of the verses: V. 6, 7 instead of following V. 5 are inserted at the top of the second plate, first side, and the first line of V. 14 is written at the end of the first plate, second side, instead of at the top of the second plate, second side.

Translation.

First plate, first side.

V. 1. May the glorious primeval Boar—who bore (on his tusk) the charming (moist) earth like a beautiful damsel wet with perspiration engendered by embrace with her beloved—protect you!

V. 2. I salute (Gaṇéṣa) the power that transcends matter, the dispeller of the array of obstacles, the destroyer of the mountains of sins, the first cause of the worlds.

V. 3. There was a king Harihara, of unlimited glory, whose fame was brilliant as sheets of snow, and whose mind was illumined by the desire of liberality.

V. 4. By him Indra and other gods are made suppliants for sacrifice in the house of Brahmans, which is delightful with the windows of the balconies of beautiful mansions exceedingly fragrant with the appearance of smoke proceeding from the fire kindled with many oblations of ghee and which is filled with the shouts of rivalry of the gods who have arrived there having been invoked by their respective hymns.

V. 5. To him was born Dévarája, by the blow of whose long sword numerous hostile kings were slain, and whose arms moved like the Mantha mountain to churn the ocean which was the multitude of valiant hostile kings.

V. [1] 6. The regions of the earth being pervaded by the flames issuing from the fire of his valour, darkness obtained entry only in the caves which were the hearts of hostile kings.

V. 7. Having for a long time carried out a fierce military expedition by order of his father king Harihara, accompanied by the six components of the army, he, the king, reached quickly the city.

First plate, second side.

Vs. 8. Once, a minister, having pleased the king Śrí Dévarája, gave at his command that village consisting of a measured extent of land as a gift at the festival of Purári (Śiva).

Vs. 9 and 10. This Chennu Bhaṭṭa went to the excellent son of king Śrí Dévarája who was seated on the throne of the Karnáṭa kingdom and who was an Indra on earth, and applied to that Yuvarája (crown prince) for a document showing the boundaries of that village of his. He, the Udayádri Rája, having made an enquiry into the former grant of his father, accordingly granted (the request).

V. 11. Since then its name was called Dévaráyapuram. He, Rámachandra, subjugated (hostile) kings, was the lord of Udayádri city (and) by his skill vanquished the Mussalman king.

Second plate, first side.

Vs. 12 and 13. In the Śaka year denoted by (the chronogram) rúpálayé (1312), in the year Pramóda, in the month Jyéshṭha, on the full moon day, on Friday, Dévaráya, the ornament of kings, being in the holy place where pleasant winds blow from the excellent Tungá river (Tungabhadrá), gave an excellent land to Chennubhaṭṭa of the gótra of Bháradvája, of the Ṛig Véda, and master of the path of the Puránas; the land lying on the two banks of the river named Audalá near Parachúr (village) in Addanki ráshṭra (kingdom)—measuring 15 manḍyas. Boundary stones marked with figures of the sun and the moon are planted here all round.

V. [1]14. May the king named Ṣrí Dévarája, who excels in valour, ruling the Vijayanagar kingdom as long as the moon lasts, enjoy happiness!

Second plate, second side.

May his son, the illustrious Rámachandra, conqueror of hostile kings in battles, who bears the title of Yuvarája, be victorious on earth for 1,000 years!

V. 15. Accordingly the famous Ṣrí Dévárája Miṣra, the court scholar of the best of kings Rámachandra, wrote (this) charitable edict.

V. 16. This general maxim of kings should always be observed by you; thus Rámachandra again and again entreats all these future kings.

Ṣrí Rámachandra.

COPPER-PLATE No. 2. (A.D. 1435-36 ?)

[Tiruvídu grant.]

Note.

[This is a Telugu copper-plate grant and is edited from the original preserved in the Collector's office, Nellore. Mr. Sewell refers to it (No. 66, page 9, Vol. II).

The engraving is excellent and the orthography calls for no remarks.

The cyclic and S.S. dates do not agree.]

TRANSLATION.

Hail! On Monday, the 15th of the bright fortnight of Kártika (month) of the year Párthiva, corresponding to 1357 of the illustrious, victorious and prosperous Ṣáliváhana Ṣaka era — Dévaráya Voḍaya Gáru of the gótra of Káṣyapa, after making prostrations to the illustrious lotus feet of the illustrious Ahóbaḷa déva, the deity of Tiruvídu, who is the Lord of Vaikuṇṭa Déṣa of Kali Yuga, who is the ruler of the crores of worlds of the whole universe, and who is called Náráyaṇa, whose vehicle is the bird Garuḍa, who is the establisher of the path of the Védas and who is the illustrious inaugurator of the philosophy of the illustrious Ṣrí Rámánuja,[1] gave the (following) charitable deed so that religious merit might accrue to his father Parvataráya, his mother Párvatí Déví, his grandfather Rámachandra Ráya, and his grandmother Lakshmí Déví. We have given the village named Tiruvídu which is in the bed of the tank named Karakili and which lies on the northern bank of the Pináki (Pennéru), in the Pánkanándu district in Udayagiri kingdom belonging to us, to the deity Ahóbaḷéṣvara of Tiruvídu, after pouring water into the hands of Purushóttamayya, ṣon of Padmanábhayya, who is of the gótra of Paráṣara, and follower of the Yajuṣ Sákhá and who is the temple servant of Ahóbaḷadéva, for providing all kinds of enjoyments (to the deity), so that the deity may enjoy the eight powers and the eight enjoyments. Having accepted this, may the deity deign to protect us!

[1] Rámánuja, the Vaishnavite reformer, flourished in the twelfth century of our era.

The protection of another's gift is twice as meritorious as one's own gift. By resuming another's gift, one's own gift becomes inefficacious.

Verily the country to the extent of three 'Yójanas' surrounding the temple of Ahóbaḷa Nṛisimha is a hundred times more sacred than Gayá, Prayág and Káṣi.

Obeisance to Ṣrí Narasimha!

Obeisance to Ṣríman Rámánuja!

Ṣrí Ráma.

COPPER-PLATE No. 3. (A.D. 1429–30.)

[Lingampáḍu. Grant of Dévaráya II (Vijayanagar). S.S. 1351.]

Note.

This grant consists of three copper plates strung on a ring bearing the usual emblem of the Vijayanagar dynasty The plates excluding the circular portion at the top are $5\frac{1}{2} \times 7\frac{1}{2}$ inches. The first and third plates are inscribed on the inside only, while the second is inscribed on both sides. The writing is in the Nandinágari alphabet and in excellent preservation and the language is Sanskrit verse.

The inscription records that king Dévaráya II of Vijayanagar gave the village of Lingampád which was thenceforward surnamed Pratápadévaráyapuram, along with Tanḍa (Taḍa) to Annamárádhya, otherwise known as Kompalli, the son of Mallikárjuna. The village Lingampáḍu was situated in Paḍanáḍu, in the Chandragiri Rájya, in the Porúr ṣíma, and to the south of the river Svarnamukhi. The date of the grant was the 12th of the bright half of Kártika of 1351 S.S. and cyclic year Saumya.

The donee is said to have been the governor of the northern gate of Ṣríṣaila, and a worshipper of Ṣiva. His religious sanctity is curiously described; it was so great that when the Panchákshara and a Rudráksha bead having one face were placed on one scale and he sat on the other, the latter went up. The exact meaning of this is not quite clear as the inscription in this portion is apparently corrupt. He was an Árádhya (a Ṣaiva sect) and was named Annam, but his popular name was Kompalli.

The inscription resembles that of the Satyamangalam grant of the same king (E.I., Vol. III, p. 35) and the verses relating to the genealogy of the donor are identical with a few variations.

The date of the Satyamangalam grant is 1346 S.S.

The engraver was Muddana, son of Vírana and he is described as Ṣásanácháryavarya, the best of edict-engravers.

Translation.

First plate, second side.

Adoration be to Ṣrí Gaṇádhipati (Gaṇéṣa)!

V. 1. Salutation be to Ṣiva, who is beauteous with the moon, as with a chámara, kissing his lofty head, and who is the main pillar of the creation of the city of the three worlds!

V. 2. May the wonderful elephant[1] whose pleasure-park sages call the Vedas, bring you great happiness!

V. 3. May Hari, to whom lifting up the earth (when) in the form of a boar, the ocean became a pleasure-pond, bring you prosperity!.[2]

[1] Ganéṣa who has the face of an elephant.

[2] This is an invocation to Vishnu in his boar incarnation.

V. 4. From the milky ocean arose the flower of the waters (the moon) which is fresh and never withered and which Íṣvara (Ṣiva) wears on the head.

V. 5. The descendant of him (the moon), who is the storehouse of eternal fragrance, named Yadu, was the wonderfully sweet fruit of penance performed by the earth.

V. 6. In his lineage which was characterized by valour, there was a king named Sangama. The celestial river (Ganges) shone, having its bed formed by his fame, as it were.

V. 7. Amongst the sons of him (Sangama) who was the treasure of all gems, king Bukka became universal sovereign as the 'kaustubha' among gems.

V. 8. The son of him (Bukka) whose wife was Gaurámbiká, was king Harihara, who was excellent in modesty, who wore great glory as a necklace.

V. 9. Who verily traversed the fourteen worlds with the fame of the sixteen mahádánas (great gifts) (performed by him) reaching all the quarters (of the world).

V. 10. His son was named Pratápa Dévaráya whose prowess was like that of Indra, who on account of his virtues was as it were the delight of his subjects incarnate.

V. 11. Having consumed (as a sacrifice) the fuel which is his enemies in the fire which is his valour on the (marriage)[1] altar which is the battle field, the goddess of victory was taken in marriage by this hero.

V. 12. The son of him (Pratápa Dévaráya), whose wife was Hémámbiká, was the heroic king Vijaya, eminent in modesty, the treasury of knowledge and skilled in solving difficult matters.

[1] This is all very fanciful. The destruction of enemies is compared to a marriage ceremony.

V. 13. The queen of him (Vijaya) who was the store-house of compassion was Náráyanámbiká as Mahá-Lakshmi was of Ṣaura (Krishna) and Párvati was of Ṣankara (Ṣiva).

Second plate, first side.

V. 14. Resplendent on earth is king Dévaráya, the giver (of gifts), the excellent fruit of their austerities in previous births in the form of a son.

V. 15. Which king they style another Vikramáditya in valour, another Bhója in enjoyment, and a Kubéra in liberality.

V. 16. Whom kings served with chámaras and other emblems of royalty, belonging to Abhanga,[1] Vanga, Kalinga, Vanga and other kingdoms, held by themselves.

V. 17. Who is Rájádhirája, valiant, who is Rájaparaméṣvara, who is great with the biruda "Bháshalanghitabhúpálabhujanga" (the paramour of kings who break their word).

V. 18. Who has the surname Múruráyaraganḍa (the conqueror of the three kings, viz., Chera, Chola and Pándya), who is Pararáyabhayankara (the terror of other kings), and who is eulogized by panegyrists as Hinduráyasuratrána (a Sultan among Hindu kings).

V. 19. He, the foremost of the glorious, king Praudha (Déva)ráya, in the town named Vijaya which has for its moat the glorious Tungabhadra,

[1] It is not known what kingdom is referred to by Abhanga and it is curious that Vanga is mentioned twice, probably we should read Anga for Vanga in one case.

V. 20. In the Ṣaka year reckoned in order by the moon (1), the arrows (5), Ráma (3), and the moon (1) i.e., 1351, in the year Saumya in the month of Kártika, on an auspicious day,

V. 21. On the 12th of the bright half, on a very holy occasion, being on the bank of the Tungabhadra river, in the presence of Virúpáksha (gave the following gift),

V. 22. To the descendant of the Kauṇḍinya gótra, the follower of the excellent Ápastamba sútra, who is glorious, the student of the Yajuṣ ṣákha, who is brilliant in virtue,

V. 23. Who is the son of the Brahman Mallikárjuna, who is of unlimited spiritual power, who is intent on the performance of the good deeds prescribed by the Srautas and the Smártas, who is intelligent,

V. 24. Who is a fit person for receiving gift of land, who is the foremost of Brahmans, who is modest, distinguished, famous and high-souled,

V. 25. He has studied four Vedas and understood them by the Ṣaiva scriptures; he is the lord of the northern gate at Ṣrísaila, and is renowned on earth,

V. 26. He placed the mantra consisting of five letters (Námas Ṣiváya) and a Rudráksha having one face on one scale (and he himself sat on the other). Oh wonder, he went up.

V. 27. He is known as Kompalli, and is a worshipper of Ṣiva at the six times. To the learned man named Annamárádhya, who is versed in the Védas and the Védángas,

Vs. 28 to 32. (Dévaráya) gave joyfully after making libation of water and gift of gold the village named Lingampáḍu, surnamed Pratápadévaráyapuram, along with the village Taṇḍa (Taḍa ?), situated in the Chandragiri rájya, in the country named Paḍanáḍu, in the famous síma Porúr, excellent, situated to the south of the Svarnamukhi river, as a Sarvamánya, with its four boundaries everywhere, together with its treasures and hidden deposits, with its water and stone, with its akshini and ágámi, with its actuals and outstandings; (he gave) this as ékabhóga sarvamányam to last as long as sun and stars last.

Third plate, first side.

V. 33. This copper edict has been inscribed by Muddanáchárya, son of Vírana, the best of edict-engravers.

2. Date—S.S. 1668—A.D. 1746.

3. Language—Telugu. The front side records the above said agreement and on the reverse are inscribed a few of the customary imprecatory verses in Sanskrit.]

[Obeisance to Śrí Ráma.]

This is the deed of gift executed by the Lambáḍis named (here comes a list of names) to Báva Mohandás Rághavadás on the 7th of the bright half of Mágha of the year Akshaya, corresponding to the illustrious, victorious, and prosperous S.S. year 1668. In fasli 1156 we settled to give one rupee per puṭṭi of salt purchased by Brinjáris (salt traders) to maintain the charity in your maṭham at Bandar Rámayapaṭnam. Therefore we, the salt traders who trade at Pákala, Bingi-napalli and Tummalapenṭa of Sarkár Udayagiri, Zuvvaladinne, Krishṇapaṭnam and Gangapaṭnam of Sarkár Sarvepalli, and Gógulapalli, Isikipalli and Allúru of Sarkár Kambham, and other ports on the coast and we, the Lambáḍis or whoever we be; bind ourselves to continue in the above said manner the charity in your maṭham to your sons and grandsons in succession as long as the sun and moon endure. This deed of gift has been executed in these terms with our consent.

[Two imprecatory verses.]

[The Málakonḍa temple grant of Kandukúr Taluk. Telugu.]

Translation.

Prosperity! Hail! On the 15th of the bright fortnight of Vaiṣákha of the year Vyaya, corresponding to the illustrious Ṣaka year 1328, Mahárája Ṣrí Mallaya Reḍḍi, the son of Ṣrígiri Reḍḍi, grandson of Pina Kómati Reḍḍi, and great grandson of Vémaya Reḍḍi, who (Vémaya) had the birudas Jagannobbaganḍa (the sole hero of the world), Jita Gópála[1] (the conqueror of Gopála), Pallava Trinétra, Vairivíra (the hero to enemies), Basava Ṣankara, who (Vémaya) was the builder of (the flight of) steps at Ṣríṣaila (Parvata), and the giver of unlimited land and the gifts prescribed by Hémádri, issued this charitable edict to Málekonḍa Kéṣava Díkshit, the priest of Vishnu of Mályádri (Málakonḍa), the son of Rangá Chárya and grandson of Peddayya, of the Paráṣara gótra, of the Ápastamba sútra, and of the Yajuṣṣákhá. We have granted on this holy occasion with libation of water the hereditary right of worshipping Vishnu at the villages Cherukúru, Kámayapalli, Ádúru, and Penṭaréla, and their hamlets, which are attached to Chunḍi in Kandukúru. Therefore you and your sons and grandsons should enjoy this for ever as long as the sun and moon last.

COPPER-PLATE No. 6. (A.D. 1602–03.)

[Mangalampád grant of Venkaṭa I.]

Note.

The original of this grant was secured from its owner by Rao Sahib T. Raghaviah, Deputy Collector of Gudur Division. It consists of five plates measuring $8\frac{1}{3}$ inches long and 7 inches wide, the first and last of which are inscribed on their inner sides only. The plates are held together by a ring passing through their upper part which is rounded at the top. They are in a state of excellent preservation.

The grant throughout is in the Nandinágari alphabet and the language is Sanskrit. It is entirely in verse of various metres. The letters are very clearly engraved and it is noteworthy that very few mistakes are found in this grant. The orthography calls for no special remarks.

The grantor is Venkata I, who also issued the Vilapaka grant (Ṣaka 1523).

The date of the grant is Ṣaka 1524 or A.D. 1602–03, cyclic year Ṣubhakṛit, on the 12th day of the month of Ashádha.

The donee was Ṣrí Rangarája, son of Jagannáthárya, grandson of Ṣrí Rangarájárya, of the gótra of Atri, of the Ápastamba sútra, and foremost of the students of the Yajuṣ Ṣákhá. His genealogy is traced up to one Védántódayana, who was the cook of Ṣrí Rámánujárya (the Vaishnava philosopher) and who was famed for his shastraic lore.

From this inscription we learn that Kavitárkíka-simha, i.e., Védántáchárya or Déṣika, the Vaishnava philosopher, was a disciple of Várihamsámbuváha, and descendant of the above said Védántódayana.

The object of the grant is the village of Mangalampáḍ alias Pórúr, surnamed Jagannáthapuram, situated in the kingdom (Rájya) of Chandragiri, in the division of Paḍanáḍu, north of Santavélúr, east of Ugumudípera agrahára, south of Uchúr and west of Ilúr. It is stated that the gift was made before the deity Venkaṭéṣa.

The Vamṣávali (genealogy) of the grantor is identical with that of the Vilapaka grant (Vol. IV, E.I., p. 272) and the verses of the two grants are identical throughout except in a few places. No new historical information is accordingly furnished.

The stanzas of this grant were composed by Chidambara Kavi, sister's son of Ṣiva Súrya, the king of poets.

The engraver is said to have been Kámayárya, the son of Gaṇapárya, the brother of Vírana (probably the same individual who engraved the Vilapaka grant.)

Like the Vilapaka grant, this grant bears at the end the colophon Ṣrí Venkaṭéṣa (Vishnu) in Telugu characters.

Translation.

First plate, second side.

Salutation to Ṣrí Venkaṭéṣa!

V. 1. I seek refuge in that pair of substances,[1] by virtue of whose touch a stone became the gem of women, and which is deserving of worship by the gods (or the wise).

V. 2. I seek refuge in Vishvakséna, whose courtiers, over a hundred in number, the elephant-headed (Ganéṣa) and others, destroy the obstacles of (his) devotees.

[1] The pair of substances are the two feet of Ráma. When he once trod on a stone, it immediately became a woman. She was Ahalyá, the wife of Gautama, who had been condemned by her husband for unfaithfulness to become a stone.

V. 3. Victorious is the luminary (the Moon), which is the left eye of Hari, which arose from the ocean of milk, which is the support of the chakóras,[1] and which is productive of longevity to the gods.

V. 4. His grandson was Purúravas, the son of Budha. His son was Áyus. From him was born Nahusha. After him was Yayáti. Then from him was born Puru.

In his race arose King Bharata. In his lineage was Santanu.

The fourth after him was Vijaya (Arjuna). From him was born Abhimanyu. Then came Parikshi(t).

V. 5. The eighth in descent from him was Nanda.[2] Ninth from him was born king Rája Chalikka;[3] the seventh from him was Rája Naréndra, who was devoted to Śrípati (Vishnu); the tenth after him here (i.e., on earth) was Vijjaléndra.[4] The third after him was born Víra Hémáliráya,[5] lord of Máyápuri, devotee of Murári (Vishnu).

V. 6. Fourth after him was born king Táta Pinnama, at whose sight the assemblage of enemies got frightened. Then was born king Somadéva, who in one day captured seven forts from the enemy. To him was born an heroic son, named king Rághavadéva. Then was the glorious King Pinnama.

V. 7. King Bukka was the son of him (Pinnama) who was the lord of the city of Áravíḍu,[6] (Bukka) whose

[1] The chakóras are fabulous birds supposed to feed on moonbeams.

[2] Nanda—the composer seeks to connect the family of the donor with previous dynasties, e.g., Nanda, Chálukya and Kálachúri. The Nanda dynasty was subverted by the Mauryas.

[3] Chalikka and Rája Naréndra are Chálukyas.

[4] Vijjaléndra was of the Kálachuri dynasty.

[5] Víra Hémáliráya, lord of Máyápuri was probably the Kálachuri king Permádi; (S.S. 1050) E.I., Vol. III, p. 238.

splendour was increasing, and by whom even the kingdom of Sáluva Nrisimha[1] was firmly established.

Second plate, first side.

V. 8. Bukka, the ornament of kings, who was a very tree of paradise to learned men, married the lovely Ballámbiká, who in the beauty of her body surpassed the nymphs of heaven, and who was of estimable character, just as Vishnu (married) Lakshmí.

V. 9. As the daughter of Kalaṣámbudhi (Lakshmí) obtained (a son) the flower-arrowed (Káma) from Mádhava, as the daughter of the chief of mountains (Párvatí) obtained Kumára from Ṣankara, as Ṣachí obtained Jayanta from the lord of the gods (Indra), so did Ballamá obtain from king Bukka, a son Rámarája, who was renowned in the world.

V. 10. Having vanquished by the great valour of his arm in battle the army of Sapáda,[2] though consisting of 70,000 horse, he seized from him the fort of Avanigiri,[3] and suddenly put to flight even Kásappudaya who excelled Indra in valour.

V. 11. He, whose prosperity was increasing, captured the fort of Kandanavólu[4] by the excessive strength of his arm. Having partaken of the poison administered by his relations, he converted it into ambrosia, (i.e., did not die) owing to his devotion to the feet of Hari who was present there.

V. 12. Resplendent was Lakkámbiká, the queen of the glorious king Rámarája, who was a philosopher's stone to the assemblage of scholars, as Lakshmí, the wife of the lotus-eyed Vishnu.

V. 13. Owing to his many austerities he had a son, the illustrious king Rangarája, the light of the lunar race. When his power was resplendent, O wonder! even the eyes of the beautiful-eyed (ladies) of (his) enemies became bright.[1]

V. 14. Having obtained as consort the virtuous Tirumalámbika, who captivated the heart by her virtues, who eclipsed even the renown of Arundhati[2] by the beauty of her character and who surpassed the fame of Vasumatí[3] in patience, just as the moon (obtained) Róhiní, he, the foremost of heroes, rejoiced.

V. 15. This very valiant king begot these sons in succession on queen Tirumalá: the heroic Rámarája, versed in politics, the excellent Tirumalaráya and king Venkaṭádri.

V. 16. This hero Rámarája, having slain in battle his enemies who were the scourges of the whole earth, whose fame was as celebrated as that of Bharata, Manu, Bhagíratha and other kings, ruled the circle of the earth.

V. 17. Hearing the succession of his gifts sung by Vidyádhari women in accompaniment to the sound of their lutes resonant on account of their being struck with their nails, the tree of the city of the gods appears to plunge entirely into the ocean under the semblance of its reflection.

[1] I.e. he killed his enemies. Their widows could not use collyrium to their eyes which therefore appeared white though filled with tears. Not only were the eyes of his own ladies bright owing to his success, but also those of his enemies' widows. Hence the wonder.

[2] Arundhatí—wife of Vasishṭha—type of chastity.

[3] Vasumatí—the earth—type of patience.

V. 18. Śrí Vara (Víra?) Venkaṭádri Rája shone on earth, resembling Lakshmana in beauty, surpassing the roar of thunder-clouds by the twang of his bowstring and causing great delight to the minds of his friends.[1]

V. 19. Amongst the three sons of king Śrí Ranga, king Tirumala Mahárája, of great prowess, wise, having subdued hostile kings in battle, and having been anointed to peerless sovereignty, ruled the whole earth, as Hari among the trinity.

V. 20. When the installation of this, the foremost of the famous and the moon of kings, took place, this earth being sprinkled with the water (poured out) on the occasion of numerous gifts attained as it were the position of queen.[2]

V. 21. Then shone his son, Śrí Rangaráya, famous, the bestower of wealth on dependants, the collection of the long accumulated merit of Śrí Vengalámba, and whose hand eclipsed the celestial tree (in liberality).

Third plate, first side.

V. 22. When his installation ceremony was performed according to the prescribed rules by the best of [1] The epithets in this verse apply both to king Venkatádri and Lakshmana, brother of Ráma.

Lakshmana cháru murti :

(1) in the case of Venkatádri, resembling Lakshmana in beauty.

(2) in the case of Lakshmana—having a form possessing auspicious marks.

Méghanádha—

(1) roar of thunder clouds, in the case of Venkatádri.

(2) Indrajit, son of Rávana, who was defeated by Lakshmana—in the case of Lakshmana.

Sumitrásaya—

(1) The desire of friends—in the case of Venkatádri.

(2) The desire of Sumitra, who was the mother of Lakshmana—in the case of Lakshmana.

[2] One of the ceremonies at the coronation of a king was to bathe him and his queen with sacred water.

Brahmans, when the cloud of his hand rained everywhere gold, waves of fame rose everywhere in the ten directions, and the fierce forest-fire which was the poverty of the good was quenched.

V. 23. Then his younger brother Venkaṭapati Ṣrí Dévaráya, the son of Tirumala Ṣrí Dévaráya, the fruition of the great religious merit of previous births of Ṣrí Vengalámba, devoted to the protection of the learned, and seated on the throne of universal sovereignty, like the tree of paradise (standing) on Mount Méru, ruled the whole earth with righteousness.

V. 24. Having been anointed according to the prescribed rules by the spiritual preceptor of his gótra, the famous Tátayárya, who was the ornament of the wise, just as the descendant of the Raghu family himself (Ráma) by the husband of Arundhatí (Vasishṭha), (and) having quickly destroyed the demons who were the Yavanas[1] (as Ramá), ruling the earth, he was triumphant.

V. 25. His queens, Ṣrí Venkaṭámbá, Pedayovayámba, Ṣrí Krishnámba, Kódamámba, and Ṣrí Rághavámba resembled his three Ṣaktis,[2] Níti,[3] and Dayá.[4] son of Malikibharáma,[1] returned home in despair, shorn of splendour, and thus day by day made his name significant.

V. 27. Behaving like a grandfather to friends and foes, intent on giving refuge to enemies who bowed to him; his splendour was thus eulogized by all men "he is the crusher of the pride of Avahaluráya."

V. 28. Whose prosperity is radiant, having the title manyaraganda (hero to mountain chiefs), having titles, possessed of heroes who were able to vanquish the king of Utkala (Orissa) whose might was great, the punisher of the assemblage of enemies with the fierce strength of his arm, having the great title gandaragulimányapuli (a wild tiger to wicked kings).

V. 29. The central gem (the lord) of the necklace which is the city of Áravídu,[2] dallying with the powerful goddess of valour, broad-armed like the lord of serpents (Śésha), acquiring the title mandalíkadharanívaráha (the boar on earth among provincial chiefs).

V. 30. Venga-Tirubhúvanamalla, an Arjuna in the science of the battle-field, Urugula-suratrána[3] (the Sultan of Orangal), the devotee of Hari (Vishnu),

V. 31. The best of kings, known as "Rámabhadra in battle," whose biruda is described as Nánávarna Srí Mandalíkaganda (the hero of provincial chiefs of all castes),

[1] Malikibharama is the Sanskritized form of Málik Ibrahim. He was the father of Muhammad Shah and Sultán of Golkonda. There is here a play upon the name of Mahamanda Sáhu.

[2] Áravídu is, perhaps, a village 16 miles from Ráyachoti in Cuddapah district.

[3] Suratrána is the Sanskritized form of Sultán.

V. 32. The foremost of kings descended from the gótra of Atri, of great renown, possessing an army of excellent horse,[1] and endowed with great intelligence, he had as his vassals, the Araṭṭas and Magadhas (lit. his rank was honoured by the Araṭṭas and Magadhas),

V. 33. Resplendent with righteousness like Yudhishṭhira,[2] the lord of the city of Kalyána,[3] accomplished in arts, Chálikka chakravarti (the emperor of the Chálukyas), and shining with the great crown of gems,

V. 34. Having the glory of the title ébirudaráyarábutavésyaikabhujanga (the sole paramour of the prostitutes who are the troops of kings having all titles), having beautiful fame due to the proclamation of the biruda Oddiyaráyadisápaṭṭa[4] (the vanquisher of the king of Orissa),

V. 35. Whose cheeks resembled the moon, who eclipsed the god of love[5] in beauty, the hero who punished kings who break their word, the protector of the nine continents of the earth,

V. 36. Having the title Rájádhirája, whose gifts are like those of Kubéra,[6] surnamed múruráyaraganda (the vanquisher of the three kings), possessing fame surpassing Méru,

V. 37. Indifferent to other men's wives, the terror of other kings, devoted to the protection of the good, the

---

[1] Dhaṭṭá = Daṭṭu (Canarese) = a crowd, an army.

[2] Ṣalyári, a rare word = Yudhishṭhira whose uncle was Salya, king of Madra

[3] The birudas Venga Tribhuvana Malla and Kalyánapurádhipa are meant to show connection with the eastern and western Chálukyas.

[4] Oddiya is Orissa.

Disápatta (Canarese) = causing (enemies) to be scattered in all directions.

[5] Asamakánda — Asamabána = the number of whose arrows is odd (five i.e., the god of love).

[6] Amhati — an unusual Sanskrit word = gift.

destroyer of the tiger-like wicked,[1] having the title aríbhagandabhérunda (the eagle to the elephants which are his enemies), the store of ambrosia which is faith in Vishnu,

V. 38. He was eulogized daily by the crowd of bards, singing with folded hands "be victorious, live long," with these and other titles.

V. 39. His glory was sung by the Kámbhója, Bhója, Kalinga, Karaháta, and other kings who became his doorkeepers.

V. 40. He, Venkaṭapati, the foremost of kings, who surpasses the assemblage of ancient kings in policy, who is a tree of paradise to the crowd of scholars, having won the throne of Karnáṭa by the might of his arm, having subdued his enemies from the bridge (Rámé-ṣvaram) as far as the Himálayas, and joyfully ruling the whole earth, is resplendent.

Vs. 41 and 42. In the Ṣaka year, reckoned by the Védas (4), the eyes (2), the arrows (5), and the moon (1), i.e., 1524, in the year Ṣubhakrit, in the month of Áshádha, in the bright fortnight, on the auspicious twelfth tithi, under a sacred asterism in the presence of the lotus feet of Ṣrí Venkaṭéṣa, who is the store-house of bliss,

V. 43. To the excellent Ṣrí Rangarája of the illustrious gótra of Atri, who is famed as the ornament of the earth, the follower of the excellent Ápastamba sútra, the foremost of the students of the Yajuṣ Ṣákhá.

V. 44. There was a great man named Vedántódayana, who was the cook of the illustrious Rámánujárya and who was famed for his learning in all the scriptures.

[1] Dushṭaṣárdúlamardana — the tiger was the emblem of the Chola king. The birnda may refer to this; it would then mean the vanquisher of the wicked Chóla king.

V. 45. In his lineage arose a great man named Várdihamsámbuváha, whose disciples Kavitárkikasimha (Védántáchárya, known as Déṣikáchárya) and others were renowned on earth.

Vs. 46 to 51. In his family arose Ṣrí Rangarájárya of great intelligence. To his grandson who commented on the two schools of the Vedánta (i.e., the Sánskrit and the Drávida or Tamil Schools), the son of the excellent Bráhman Jagannátha, who was a proud lion to the mad elephants who are his opponents in controversy, who was intelligent, and who was renowned for having everywhere promulgated the Vedic conduct; to the excellent Srí Rangarájá, who was (as it were) the accumulation of virtues, the self-chosen lord of the goddess of universal sovereignty of the Vaishnava creed, who reached the summit of altruistic acts, who is skilled in selecting learned men who observe good conduct, whose lotus-mind delighted in the contents of the eighteen Puránas, the best in righteous acts, of pure disposition of mind, who by daily giving food pleased the crowd of all Brahmans, and who was possessed of knowledge and modesty,

Vs. 52 to 57. The village named Mangalampádu situated in the kingdom (Rájya) of Chandragiri, connected with Padanádu, having (also) the name Pórúr, lying to the west of the village Ilupúr, lying to the north of the village called Santavélúru, lying to the east of the agrahára Ugumudipera, and lying to the south of the village named Uchchúru, well known by its other name Jagannáthapuram, free from all taxes, with the four boundaries everywhere, together with its treasures, hidden deposits, stones, water, and every thing which it does or may contain, with its akshini and ágámi, with its trees, having wells, cisterns, tanks, embankments and gardens, to be enjoyed as a single share, to be enjoyed in succession by sons, grandsons, and others (of the grantee) as long as the moon and sun endure, subject to right of gift, mortgage, sale or transfer,

V. 58. Surrounded by many assiduous and amiable learned men, who followed the path of the Ṣrautas, who excelled in speech, and who were headed by his domestic chaplain, the glorious king Víra Venkaṭapati Mahárâya, after making gift of gold and libation of water, joyfully gave.

V. 59. This is the charter of Ṣrí Venkaṭapatirâya, the best of kings, the great king, the famed, who is a very moon to the lotuses which are scholars.

V. 60. At the bidding of Ṣrí Venkaṭapatirâya, Chidambara Kavi, who acquired an exalted position on account of being the sister's son of Ṣiva Súrya, the king of poets, composed the verses of this copper-plate grant.

V. 61. Under the orders of king Ṣrí Venkaṭapatirâya, Kámayárya, son of Ganapárya, the brother of Vírana, engraved this copper-plate grant.

V. 62. Of giving and protecting (another's gift) protecting is superior to giving; by giving, one attains heaven, but by protecting one gets imperishable bliss.

V. 63. The protection of another's gift is twice as meritorious as gift by one self; by resuming another's gift one's own gift becomes inefficacious.

V. 64. Whoever resumes land given by himself or another is reborn a worm in ordure for 60,000 years.

V. 65. There is only one sister of all kings in this world, to wit, land bestowed on Bráhmans, who is not to be enjoyed nor married.

V. 66. "This general duty of kings should always be observed by you," (thus) does Rámachandra again and again exhort all future kings.

Copper-plate No. 7. (A.D. 1647–48.)

[Utsúr grant of Ranga VI of Karnáṭa, S.S. 1569.]

Note.

This grant is transcribed from the original copper-plates. Like the Mangalampád grant it consists of five plates, the first and last of which are inscribed on the inner sides only.

The grant was issued by King Ranga VI of Karnáṭa in Ṣaka 1569 (A.D. 1647) in the year Sarvajit, in the month of Chaitra on Ṣrí Rámanavami of the bright fortnight. It records the gift of Utsúr village surnamed Vilásapuram, situated in the rájya of Chandragiri and the síma of Pórúr to the Brahman named Anantáchárya, son of Anantasáyanárya and grandson of Kedámbi Anantárya, who belonged to the Átréya gótra, followed the Ápastamba sútra and studied the Yajuṣ Ṣákhá. The gift was made in the temple of Ṣrírangam, situated "between the two Káveris."

The composition of the verses is said to have been by Rámakavi, son of Kámakóti, and grandson of Sabhápati. This Rámakavi also composed the Kallakurchi grant of Ranga VI (I.A., Vol. XIII, page 153). The engraver of that grant, viz., Sómanáthárya, son of Kámaya and grandson of Ganapayárya, engraved this grant also.

The language throughout is Sanskrit and the character is Nandinágari. The whole is in verse of various metres.

The Vamṣávali given in this grant is identical with that furnished by the Kaḷḷakurchi grant (I.A., p. 153), the verses in both being identical almost throughout. The numbers of the corresponding verses in the Kaḷḷakurchi grant are printed within brackets.

The orthography calls for no special remarks, all peculiarities having been noticed by previous editors of the Karnáṭa grants (Kaniyur, Vilapaka, Kondayata and Kaḷḷakurchi). There are numerous mistakes in the text. They have been corrected in the text as otherwise the foot-notes would be unduly numerous.

Translation.

The first twenty verses are the same as in the Mangalampáḍ plates.

V. 21. As the four Védas, Sáma and the others, were produced from the mouth of the Creator; as the four methods of diplomacy, conciliation (Sáma) and the others, were produced from the warlike Satyavák; as the four sons, Ráma and the others, were born to Dasaratha; so four sons of immeasurable glory were born to him (Tirumala), the diadem of kings. [V. 18.]

V. 22. To him there were (born) king Raghunátha, Śrí Rangaráya, who was a párijáta[1] to dependants, Śrí Rámarája, the moon of the earth, and the celebrated Venkaṭadévaráya. [V. 19.]

V. 23. Amongst those brothers, Śrí Rangaráya, who reached the farther shore of the milk-ocean of politics, and who was renowned in the eight quarters, was installed sovereign of the kingdom of Penugonḍa. [V. 20.]

V. 24. Then Śrí Venkaṭapatidévaráya, brilliant in polity, ruled the earth, beautifying the ten regions with his fame. [V. 21.]

V. 25. To his elder brother the Lord Rámarája, whose deeds put the celestial tree to shame, were born Tirumalarája and the famous Śrí Rangaráya. [V. 22.]

V. 26. To Śrí Rangaráya, of these two, were born sons, excelling in modesty, endowed with compassion, learned and glorious. [V. 23.]

V. 27. Amongst those sons of king Śrí Rangaráya, king Śrí Rámaráya shone for a long time, being beyond the reach of the poetry of the best of poets, as the Kaustubha amongst the gems sprung from the ocean. [V. 24.]

V. 28. Formerly by the celebrated Rámaraja[2] who resembled Śrí Ráma in beauty, were begotten five sons,

[1] Párijáta a mythical tree of paradise.

[2] Rámarája referred to in v. 28 is not the same Rámarája who is mentioned in v. 27, but is Tirumala's elder brother Rámarája. The word purvam in v. 28 and v. 35 shows this clearly. This has been pointed out by Dr. Hultzsch (Vol. XIII, p. 153, Ind. Ant.).

possessed of increasing fortune, clever in protecting the world, followers of the path of polity, and anxious to grant the desires of the crowd of learned men as the (five) trees of the residence of the gods (heaven) from the milk-ocean. [V. 25.]

V. 29. Amongst those kings of famous deeds, Śrí Rangarája, the moon of the earth, became renowned in the three worlds like the párijáta among celestial trees. [V. 26.]

V. 30. The horses which have been abandoned by hostile kings who were eager to flee through great fear at the very sound of his drum in battle are rolling on the ground from fatigue. Do they sweep away the foot-prints of (their) owners which are marked with waterpots, umbrellas, flags, &c., but which have become (mere) ornaments of the forest, fearing that he would pursue them (their owners) (in case their foot-prints were visible)? [V. 27 cf. Kaniyur grant Vol. III, E.G., p. 243.]

V. 31. By the great grace of the lord of Séshagiri (Vishnu) who was pleased with his excellent austerities Śrí Rangárája had two sons, of lovable beauty, and resembling Indra in happiness. [V. 27.]

V. 32. (They) two named Peda Venkaṭéndra and the lord Pinavenkaṭa, who were anxious to protect (their) subjects, and able to destroy the cruel (Khara) and the wicked (Dúshana) [1], caused delight (to the world) like Ráma and Lakshmana. [V. 28.]

V. 33. Of these two, the illustrious king Peda Venkaṭéndra was the superior in age, valour, liberality, magnanimity, fortitude, learning and all other virtues. Thinking that the sea may become land, being filled with the dust raised by his army, when he proceeds on expeditions for learning the art of destroying his enemies, Hari took up his abode in his heart.[1] [V. 29.]

V. 34. When this son of Śrí Rangarája, Venkaṭadévarája, the best of kings, was anointed to the kingdom of Penugonḍa, wise men also were anointed with (gifts of) gold. [V. 30.]

V. 35. The glorious king Venkaṭádri, who was renowned as he was the younger brother of his (Peda Venkaṭa's, or Venkaṭa II's) grandfather (Ráma referred to in V. 28), became the object of grace of the self-chosen consort of Lakshmí (Vishnu), was a very lion who took the vow to destroy the mad elephants which were his proud enemies, and resembled a new Bhója[2] skilled in protecting the assemblage of poets. [V. 31.]

V. 36. His son was the glorious king Ranga, who was the ocean of virtues, and on account of the excellence of whose liberality the tree of paradise dwells (i.e., hides itself) somewhere in the garden of heaven. [V. 32.]

V. 37. On account of his good deeds accumulated in previous births, to this king of marvellous virtue was (born) a son Gópála, foremost of kings, whose majesty resembled that of Indra, and who having himself granted the desired boons of all learned men on earth, made (men) forget Bhója and other kings who were accomplished in gifts. [V. 33.]

[1] The sea is the proper abode of Hari; fearing it may become land he moves to Venkaténdra's heart.

[2] Bhója was a great patron of learning.

V. 38. He, the blessed, associated with his wife, worshipped with prayers the lord of Venkaṭaṣaila (Tirupati). Then that god, the granter of boons, being pleased, said to him out of mercy. [V. 34.]

V. 39. "I have now been incarnated on earth as a renowned son named Ṣrí Rangaráya in consequence of the power of the severe austerities of China (Pina) Venkaṭádri just as formerly the son of Vásudéva named Krishna became incarnate on account of the severe austerities of Bala's enemy (Indra). As Nanda formerly considered him (Krishna) as his son, consider Ṣrí Rangaráya as your son."[1] [V. 35.]

V. 40. King Gópála rejoiced, having obtained, for the protection of the earth (and) for the perpetuation of his family, a son, the glorious king Rangaráya, whose beauty resembled that of the consort of Ṣrí (Vishnu).

V. 41. To protect good men, and to destroy the pride of the wicked, resembling in beauty the destroyer of the great pride of Kamsáṣura (i.e., Krishna), this Rangarája is seated on the peerless throne of universal sovereignty, to which he was installed as king, and which is daily eulogized with devotion by the kings of various countries.

V. 42. Ṣrí Ranga, the foremost of kings, whose kingship was bestowed by (the deity) Ṣrí Rangéṣvara, who received presents from the kings of the Bhójas and Magadhas who prostrated themselves at his lotus-feet, and whose lotus-feet were placed on the heads of (i.e., who was honoured by) all the kings of earth, ruled with great righteousness the earth whose girdle is the seven oceans. [V. 36.]

V. 43. He who resembles the sea in great depth, the sole excellent capturer of the fort of Cháurási,[1] who causes great terror to the minds of hostile kings of the eight quarters; devotee of the bearer of the bow Ṣárgna (Vishnu). [V. 37.]

V. 44. The vanquisher of enemies, who is a very celestial tree to mendicants, hosabirudaraganḍa, ráya-ráhuttaminda, blessed in famous deeds, the possessor of the dignity of the famous titles mannyán sámula,[2] and others, the vanquisher of the assemblage of enemies.

[V. 40. Of Kondayata grant p. 131, I.A., Vol. XIII.]

V. 44½. Possessing prosperity which is radiant, having the biruda biruda manneraganḍa (the hero or vanquisher of mountain chieftains having titles), associated with heroes who were able to vanquish the mighty king of Utkala (Orissa).

V. 45. Dallying with the powerful goddess of valour, he is the central gem (lord) of the necklace which is the city of Áravíḍu, strong-armed like the lord of serpents (Sésha), who acquires the title Mandalíkadharanívaráha (the boar on earth among provincial chiefs). [V. 38.]

V. 46. The foremost of kings descended from the gótra of Atri, of great renown, whose cheeks resembled the moon, who eclipsed the god of love in beauty.

V. 47. The hero who punished kings who break their word, the protector of the nine continents of the Earth, having the title Rájádhirája, whose gifts resemble those of Kubéra.

[1] Cháurâsi — Hindustani = 84.

[2] Sámula—Arabic (?) = confederate. Mannyán = mountain chiefs.

V. 47½. Having the biruda Múruráyaraganḍa (the vanquisher of the three kings), possessing fame surpassing Méru.

V. 48. He, the glorious Rangaráya, who surpasses the multitude of ancient kings in policy, who is a very tree of paradise to the crowd of scholars, having won the throne of Karnáṭa by the might of his arm, having subdued his enemies from Raméṣvaram as far as the Himálaya and joyfully ruling the whole sea-girt earth, is resplendent.

Vs. 49 and 50. In the Ṣaka year, reckoned by the planets (9), the seasons (6), the arrows (5), and the moon (1), (i.e., 1569), in the year named Sarvajit, in the month named Chaitra, in the bright fortnight, on the sacred day called Ṣrí Rámanavami,[1] being in the presence of Ṣrí Rangéṣvara who resides between the two Káverís (the two branches of the Káveri at Ṣrírangam). [Vs. 41 and 42.]

V. 51. To him who is the descendant of the gótra of Atri, follower of the Ápastamba sútra, the foremost of students of Yajuṣ Ṣákhá, the granter of boons,

V. 52. Who is of immeasurable glory, and of spotless fame, who is the grandson of Kéḍámbi Anantárya, and the son of Ananta Ṣáyanayárya,

V. 53. To the excellent (Brahman) Anantáchárya, the ornament (of men), the great-souled, who pleased Brahmans following excellent customs with gifts of delicacies,

V. 54. The gem of the court of kings, the protector of all relations, who single-handed was eloquent in expounding the established Vaishnava scriptures,

[1] The ninth day in the fortnight sacred to Ráma.

V. 55. Who is clever in expounding the doctrines of the two famous schools of the Védánta (i.e., the Sanskrit and the Drávida or Tamil Schools), whose mind is a very bee at the lotus-feet of Śrí Ráma.

Vs. 56 to 59. The excellent village named Útsúr, situated in the illustrious rájya of Chandragiri, and in the síma of Pórúru, well known as Niḍuganṭakóṭa, celebrated as Piḍanádu, lying to the east of Mangavéru, to the south of Tatrayali village, to the west of Modugalapálya, and to the north of Mangalampáḍu, (?), (the village) otherwise named Vilásapuram, rich in all crops.

Vs. 60 to 62. [Same as Vs. 55, 56 and 57 in Mangalampáḍu grant.]

V. 63. Surrounded by many assiduous and amiable learned men, who follow the Vedic path, who excel in speech, and who are headed by the family priest, king Śrí Rangaráya who is worthy of being revered by intelligent men, joyfully gave with libation of water and gift of gold.

V. 64. This is the charter of the great king Víra Śrí Rangaráya, the famous, the moon to the lotuses which are scholars.

V. 65. At the bidding of Víra Śrí Rangaráya, Rámakavi, son of Kámakóṭi, and grandson of Sabhápati, composed the text of this inscription.

V. 66. Under the orders of king Víra Rangaráya, Sómanáthárya, the son of Kámaya and the excellent grandson of Śrí Ganapayárya, engraved this inscription.

Imprecatory verses (as in Mangalampád grant).

COPPER-PLATE No. 8. (A.D. 1652–53 ?)

[Telugu. Grant of Singáreḍḍipalli.]

TRANSLATION.

Hail! On the 15th day of the bright fortnight of Chaitra of the year Nandana, corresponding to the year 1573 of the illustrious, victorious and prosperous Ṣálivá-hana Ṣaka era,[1] Mahárája Rája Ṣrí Váḍa Peda Venkaṭádri Náyanimgáru executed and granted an edict of gift of land as follows to Kandáḷḷa Doḍḍayá Cháryulu Ayyavárlugáru, who is the establisher of the path of the Vedas and promulgator of the two schools of Vedánta philosophy (i.e., Drávida and Sanskrit).

We re-name Singáreḍḍipalle Máchireḍḍipalle, situated in Ṣítárámpuram taluk (Sammatu) which was graciously given by the Rája as a Jaghir, as Ayyaváripalli. Ádúri Góvindáchárlu, Ṣésham Rághavá Cháryulu, Garimeḷḷa Vóbuḷácháryulu, Náranapáṭi Bhávaná Cháryulu, Vinna-pála Venkaṭá Cháryulu, Rámáyanam Tirumalá Cháryulu, Sálagrámam Narasimhá Cháryulu and Mahankáḷi Varadá Cháryulu, &c., said that the boundaries in the eight directions of the agraháram should be within the limits of my jurisdiction and that the boundaries on the eight sides should be settled and that a deed of gift should be granted. Therefore the details of the edict granted are :—

[Here follows a long list of the boundary points.]

Having fixed inscribed stones in this manner we have given the entire agraháram in the name of Sítáráma to the abovesaid Brahmans together with its treasures, hidden deposits and stone. Thus having established 12 shares for the Brahmans, having apportioned two shares to the village Karanam, Nellúru Gópálayyagáru, and having appointed the respective Méradars and given suitable lands to these, we have made over the agrahá-ram to you. Therefore you, your sons and grandsons, should enjoy the various kinds of grain yielded by this and live happily as long as the sun and the moon last. This document showing boundaries has been engraved by Boggavarapu Nágabattudu according to a draft written by Sádhu Lingaráju.

[Telugu. Grant of Singáreḍḍipalli.]

Translation.

Hail! On the 5th day of the bright fortnight of Śrávaṇa of the year Prabhava, corresponding to the year 1608 of the illustrious, victorious and prosperous Śáliváhana Śaka era[1] the conditions of the charitable deed executed and granted by Mahá Rája Rája Śrí Váḍa Peda Venkaṭádri Náyanimgáru to—Ádúri Govindáchá-ryulu, Adúri Rangacháryulu, Śésham Rághavácháryulu, Śésham Venkaṭácháryulu, Garimeḷḷa Vóbuḷácháryulu, Garimeḷḷa Venkaṭácháryulu, Náranapuram Bhávanácháryulu, Náraṇapuram Kóḍanda Rámácháryulu, Vinnapála Venkáṭacháryulu, Rámáyanam Tirumaláchárýulu, [1] N.B.—The years do not agree.

Sálagrámam Narasimhácháryulu, and Mahankáḷi Varadácháryulu, etc., who are the establishers of the illustrious path of the Vedas and promulgators of the two schools of Védánta philosophy, are as follows :—

In the taluk (Sammatu) of Ṣíta Rámápuram given to us as a Jághir by the Rája, we have renamed Singáreḍḍipalle-Máchireḍḍipalle as Ayyaváripalle, fixed its boundaries and granted it by this deed. In respect of wet fields under the tank now constructed by us the eastern boundaries of Singáreḍḍipalle-Máchireḍḍipalle are—the stone under the Mámilla banyan tree lying by the side of the Vágu which is to the south of the stone at the junction of Nemalidinne and Chinnavapparapalle; to the south of that stone is the stone under the tamarind tree belonging to Gára Pápayagáru; to the south of that stone is the stone under the mushti (nux vomica) tree standing on the southern side of the supply channel of the Tadinálakunṭa; to the south of that stone is the trunk of the Pacháre (Dalbergia paniculata) tree standing in the Erra fields; to the south of that tree are round and rough stones under a Boḍu (hillock); according to the limits detailed in this manner by Sádhu Achchanna and Páṇem Venkaṭa we have taken Singáreḍḍipalle.

We give water to the fields of Kancharipéṭa and Gajjalapalle which were declared in writing to be clubbed with the fields of Nemalidinna.

We confirm the 14 vrittis including that of the karanams formerly settled, fix for each share as much land as can be sown with 5 túms of seed. We give to Agastyarája Channamarája as much wet land as can be sown with 5 túms and 5 gorrus of dry land.

Further we give sufficient land to the Méradárs.

We give the remainder of the village as an agraháram in the name of Ṣítáráma. Therefore you, your sons, and grandsons should enjoy the various kinds of grain raised on these fields as long as the sun and moon exist and live happily.

[Two imprecatory verses.]

Copper-plate No. 10. (A.D. 1536-37.)

[Pólépalli grant of Achyutaráya. Saka 1458.]

Note.

This grant is referred to by Mr. Sewell under the village of Pólépalli in Darsi division. It is in the possession of the shrótriemdar who kindly lent it.

The plates are three in number, each being about 8 inches broad and 11 inches long. The ring with the seal connecting them is said to have been lost. Plates 1 and 2 are engraved on both sides while plate 3 is engraved only on one side at the bottom. The engraving is excellent throughout, but the text contains numerous mistakes.

The characters are Nandinágari, excepting the words Srí Virúpáksha at the end which are in large Canarese characters. The language is Sanskrit, and excepting the initial invocation Śrí Ganádhipatayénamah, the whole is in verse of various metres.

Lines 1–79 are almost identical with lines 1–91 of the Unamanjéri plate of Achutaráya (Vol. III, E.G., p. 151). Lines 1–62 are also found in the Hampi inscription of Krishṇaráya (E.G., Vol. II, p. 363.)

The grant is one of Achyuténdra. From line 1–79 is given an account of Achyuta and his predecessors. Lines 79–97 give the grant proper. Lines 99–102 give the name of the poet and the engraver. Lines 102–109 are the usual imprecatory verses.

No fresh historical information is furnished by the present grant. The genealogy given is—

Verse 14 of the Unamanjéri plate which gives the relationship between Achyuta and Krishnaráya is omitted in the present grant. That verse says that Narasa had by a third wife Obámbiká a son named Achyuténdra.

The grant proper (lines 79 to 97) states that Achyuténdra, being on the bank of the river Tungabhadra, on the 12th lunar day of the bright half of Kártika—the day when Vishnu rises from his sleep—of S.S. 1458, corresponding to the cyclic year Durmukhi, in the presence of the deity Viṭṭhaléṣvara, granted the village of Pólépalli, situated in the Mahárájya of Koṇḍavíḍu in the district (śíma) of Kocherlakóṭa alias Yeruvanáḍu.

Apparently on account of this the village came to be called Achyuténdrapuram. The boundaries are—

North—Chandavaram.
South—Rudrasamudram.
East—Chákicherla.
West—Lakshmípuram.

Pólépalli is still a shrotriem in Darsi Division.

The donee was Annama, the son of Chintupalli Singanárya, descendant of the gótra of Viṣvámitra, follower of the Áṣvaláyana Sútra, and student of Rikṣákhá.

The composer of this grant was Sabhápati, probably the same poet who composed the Unamanjéri and other Vijayanagar grants. The engraver is Víranáchárya, the son of Mallana, the engraver of the Unamanjéri and other grants.

TRANSLATION.

Adoration be to the Lord of hosts (Ganéṣa)!

V. 1. Salutation be to Sambhu (Siva) who is beautiful as with a chámara[1] with the moon which kisses his lofty head,[2] and who is the main pillar of the creation of the city of the three worlds.

V. 2. May the staff—like tusk of Hari (Vishnu) who assumed in sport the form of a boar [3]—resting on which the earth with Mount Meru as its apex resembled an umbrella—protect you.

V. 3. May that lustre, which dispels the darkness of obstacles, which though an elephant was born of the

[1] Chámara—the Yak's tail, used as a flywhisk—also as an ornament on the heads of horses and elephants.

[2] The moon is supposed to rest on the head of Ṣiva.

[3] This refers to the boar incarnation of Vishnu.

daughter of the mountain and which is worshipped even by Hari (Vishnu), cause prosperity.[1]

V. 4. From the milky ocean which was churned by the gods arose like fresh butter the luminary (moon) by which darkness is dispelled.[2]

V. 5. He had a son Budha whose name was true to its meaning owing to his unequalled austerities. He had a son Purúravas in consequence of his austerities. Áyus was the son of him (Purúravas) who destroyed the lives (Áyus) of his enemies with the valour of his arm. His son was Nahusha. His son was Yayáti, a hero in battle and renowned on earth. The son of him who was the husband of Śrí Dévayáni was Durvasu who was like Vasu.[3]

V. 6. In his lineage shone king Timma, the husband of Dévakí, famed among the kings of the Tuluvas[4] like Krishna in the race of Yadu.

V. 7. From him was born king Íśvara, the husband of Bukkamá, and the fearless and righteous crest-jewel of kings.[5]

[1] The invocation is to Ganésa. There is a pun on the words Gaja and Hari. Gaja = elephant and Agaja means (1) not an elephant, also daughter of Aga, i.e., Parvatí—Ganéśa though Gaja (elephant) was the son of Agaja, i.e., of Parvatí, wife of Śiva. Hari = (1) lion, (2) Vishnu. Generally Hari (the lion) is a foe of Gaja (elephant). Here Hari (Vishnu) worshipped Gaja (Ganéśa).

[2] The allusion is to the churning of the ocean of milk by the gods. The moon is supposed to have then sprung from it.

[3] There is a play on the word Vasu and the latter part of Durvasu. The Vasus were originally a class of gods. Vasu subsequently came to be identified with Vishnu.

[4] Timma is said to be of the race of the Tuluvas. This suggests that the second Vijayanagar kings originally came from the Tulu country in S. Canara. It appears further that there was no direct family relationship between the first and second Vijayanagar dynasties. See the remarks of Dr. Hultzsch on the similar Hampi grant at page 361 of Volume I, E.I.

[5] Agunabhramsam = (1) not deviating from virtue ; (2) not getting loose. There is a pun on guna which means (1) quality ; (2) string passing through the jewel.

V. 8. By him, the handsome son of Dévakí, was begotten king Narasa, as Káma by the son of Dévakí,[1] (Krishna).

V. 9. Rendered famous for various good deeds, with a delighted mind, surrounded by wise men, he again and again made the sixty kinds of gift according to prescribed rules, at Rámésvaram and every other holy place, thus increasing (lit. rendering superfluous) his great renown which was sung by the denizens of the three worlds.

V. 10. Having quickly dammed the Kávéri which was swiftly flowing with copious water, and having crossed it, he captured the enemy alive in battle, subdued his kingdom and Śrírangapaṭnam and planted a triumphal pillar. He thus shone, his deeds being eulogized in the three worlds.

V. 11. He conquered the Chéra, the Chóla, the Pándya who was the lord of Madura and whose ornament was honour, the Mussalman, fierce in valour, the Gajapati king and others. Becoming very famous from the banks of the Ganges to Lanka, and from the eastern to the western mountains, he extended his rule on the heads of kings like a garland.[2]

Vs. 12 and 13. Two sons—the princes Víra Nrisimhéndra and Krishṇaráya—a brave but modest—were born to Nṛisimha by his queens Tippáji and Nágalá Dévi as Ráma and Lakshmana (were born) to Daṣaratha by Kausalyá and Śrí Sumitrá.

V. 14. The glorious Víra Nṛisimha, seated on the jewelled throne in Vijáyanagar, excelling in fame and

[1] This is simply a play on the word Dévakí.

[2] This is a common simile in Sanskrit poetry, meaning that he made them his vassals.

righteousness even Nṛiga, Nala, Nahusha and other kings on earth, being praised by Brahmans, and having himself won the hearts of all, ruled the kingdom from the Bridge (Ráma's) [1] to Mount Suméru, and from the eastern to the western mountain.

V. 15. He made various gifts at (Chidambaram) the hall of gold, [2] at the temple of Śrí Virúpáksha,[3] at the town of the illustrious Lord (deity) of Kálahasti,[4] at Venkaṭádri (Tirupati),[5] at Kánchi, at Śrísaila,[6] at Sóna Śaila,[7] at the great Harihar,[8] at Ahobala,[9] at Sangama,[10] at Śríranga,[11] at Kumbhaghóna,[12] at the holy place Mahánandi [13] where sin is destroyed and at Nivritti.[14]

V. 16. By the streams of water poured out on the occasion of the numerous and various great gifts performed by him at Gókarna,[15] Rámasétu,[16] and all other holy places in the world, the ardent desire of (Indra) the bearer of the thunderbolt, who was intent on clipping the wings of the mountain which was sunk in the ocean[17]

[1] Sétu is Rama's bridge—said to have been built for him to cross the sea and get to Lanka (Ceylon).

[2] Hall of gold—Chidambaram in South Arcot district.

[3] This is the temple at Hampi.

[4] Kálahasti—in North Arcot district.

[5] Tirupati—in North Arcot district.

[6] Śrí Śaila—in Kurnool district on the bank of the Tungabhadra.

[7] Śónaśaila—Tiruvannámalai in South Arcot district.

[8] Harihar—in Mysore.

[9] Ahóbala—in Kurnool district.

[10] Sangam—in Nellore.

[11] Śríangam—in Trichinopoly.

[12] Kumbhaghona—this is the modern Kumbhakónam.

[13] Mahánandi—in Kurnool district.

[14] Nivritti—? not known.

[15] Gókarna— in Dharwar District.

[16] Rámasétu—Ráma's bridge.

[17] This refers to the story of the mountain Ménaka hiding itself in the ocean from fear of Indra.

which was dried up by the dust raised by the assemblage of his prancing horses, was frustrated.

V. 17. He performed (the following gifts) :--

The mundane egg, the circle of the universe, a pot containing the five elements, a jewelled cow, the seven oceans, a tree and creeper of paradise, a golden cow of plenty, a globe of gold, a horse chariot of gold, gold of the weight of a man, a thousand cows, a golden vessel, an elephant chariot of gold and five ploughs.[1]

Vs. 18 and 19. Now that this Indra of the earth, renowned for his virtues, having ruled the extensive kingdom without hindrance, has gone to heaven as if to rule the sky also, the glorious king Krishnaráya, of invincible valour, bears the earth on his arms like a jewelled bracelet.[2]

V. 20. Probably suspecting that by the spreading of his glory the universe would everywhere become one mass of light, formerly Ṣiva (to distinguish himself from the rest) became possessed of an eye in the forehead, even the lotus-eyed (Vishnu) became one with four arms, the lotus-born Brahma became one with four faces, Káli bore the sword, Ramá (Lakshmí) took up a lotus, and Vání (Sarasvatí) bore a Vína (lute) in her hand.[3]

V. 21. Was it in anger that he dried up the seven oceans with the heaps of dust of the earth torn up by the horses of his vast forces lest perchance they give refuge to his enemies, and created of his own accord as their substitutes rows of oceans with the unlimited waters

[1] These are given in the Dána Kánda (gift chapter) of Hindu law books.

[2] Mahábhujáh means one who has broad shoulders. The reading Mahimbhuji—is better.

[3] The idea is that everything became white with the lustre of Krishnaráya's fame, these gods and goddesses included. To distinguish themselves from other objects they assumed the several marks referred to in the verse.

which were poured out on the occasion of the great gifts, viz., the mundane egg (Brahmánda), a Méru of gold (Svarṇaméru), &c.

V. 22. Desiring that the assemblage of suppliants should long enjoy the wealth given by him, probably to obstruct the progress of the chariot of the sun, this lord of the earth planted everywhere in the earth firmly-fixed pillars of glory, resembling (Méru) the residence of the Gods, towering up to the sky and marked with the (history of) his expeditions for the conquest of all the quarters and with his titles.

V. 23. Again and again for securing great happiness he made the various gifts prescribed in the sacred books, the weight of a man in gold, etc., along with all minor gifts, according to the prescribed rules at Kánchi, Śrí Śaila, Śónáchala, Kanaka Sabhá (Chidambaram), Venkaṭádri (Tirupati) and other temples and at holy places of pilgrimage.

V. 24. He had the following and other birudas :—

The angry punisher of hostile kings, he whose shoulders are broad as those of Śésha (the world-serpent), he who is able to protect the earth, the punisher of untruthful kings, the satisfier of beggars, he who is fierce in battle ;

V. 25. Rájádhirája, Rájaparamésvara, the conqueror of the three kings (Chéra, Chóla and Pándya), the terror of other kings ;

V. 26. The Sultan [1] among Hindu kings, the destroyer of the wicked who are like tigers, [2] Vírapratápa (he who is famed for valour).

[1] Suratrána—is the Sanskritized form of Sultan.

[2] The tiger was the emblem of the Chólas—this biruda may simply mean the conqueror of the Chóla king.

V. 27. He is served by the Anga, Vanga, Kalinga and other kings who address him :—"Deign to look on me, O Mahárája, live, be victorious!"

V. 28. Seated on the jewelled throne at Vijayanagar, king Krishṇaráya, whose liberality is worthy of being praised by learned men, who eclipses in righteousness Nṛiga and other kings, increasing the prosperity of the assemblage of mendicants, shines with glory from the eastern hill to the slopes of the western hill, from the end of the Himálayas to the Sétu (Bridge).

V. 29. After Krishnaráya went to the world of the gods (i.e., died), his younger brother Achyuténdra, whose deeds are virtuous, the vanquisher of his enemies, the meditator on Hari, the granter of boons to learned men, having become master of the whole earth, is resplendent.

V. 30. The moon of his fame moves over the earth and waxes on all lunar days. It increases the delight of the world, waxes by day and by night along with the lotuses. (This is a contrast between the moon and the moon of his fame.)

V. 31. (The text is doubtful, Professor Keilhorn gives a conjectural rendering of this verse) :—

"Seeing how the multitude of his horses, humbling the conceit of the winds, has created darkness by the immense clouds of dust which it raises with its hoofs, one feels inclined to ask whether, eager to destroy the opponent forces, Achyuténdra angrily is drying up the ocean, because it impedes the progress of his chargers.' (Foot-note 12, Vol. III, E.I., p. 153.)

V. 32. His chámaras are waved by the hands of the rows of wives of his hostile kings to whom the prison house has become a residence; he has many birudas, viz., Rájádhirája,[1] Pararájabhayankara,[2] Eka Víra,[3] &c.

V. 33. By whom frequently the sixteen kinds of gifts were performed at Gókarna, Sangama, Nivritti, Suvarna Sabhá,[4] Sónádri,[5] Parvata,[6] Vrinchipuram and Kánchi, and at Śrí Kálahasti town, and at Kumbhaghóna.

V. 34. This ocean, whose water is being drunk by the clouds, which was drunk and thrown out by Agastya, which was heated by the crest of the fire of the arrows of Rághava (Ráma), which is ever being heated by the internal flames of fire proceeding from the mouth of Vaḍava—which thus gets dry, appears indeed full with the copious water of his gifts.

V. 35. He is always eulogized by the Anga, Vanga, Kalinga and other kings "be victorious, live long, O Mahárája!"

V. 36. Triumphant is king Achyuta, seated on the jewelled throne, residing at Vijayanagar, resplendent with fame, surpassing in polity the whole collection of kings, Nṛiga, Nala, Nahusha, &c., possessed of unequalled valour of arm and liberality.

Vs. 37 to 48. In the Śaka year 1458, in the year Durmukhi, on the holy 12th lunar day of the bright fortnight of the month Kártika—the day when Vishnu rises from his sleep—Achyuténdra who is revered among intelligent men, being on the bank of the Tungabhadra, in the temple of Viṭṭhaléśvara, having purified himself by bathing, with an attentive mind, wearing two washed

[1] Rájádhirája—paramount lord. [2] The terror of other kings.

[3] The sole hero.

[4] Suvarna Sabha = hall of gold—Chidambaram.

[5] Śónádri—same as Sóna Śaila—Tiruvannámalai in South Arcot district. This verse is slightly different in Unamanjéri plate.

[6] Parvata—Śrí Parvata, i.e., Śrí Śaila.

garments and wearing suitable ornaments, surrounded by assiduous and amiable learned men who are followers of the Ṣrautas and excel in eloquence, and who are headed by the family priest joyfully gave with gold and a libation of water to Annama the son of Chintapalli Singanárya who is of the gótra of Viṣvámitra, who is a follower of the Áṣvaláyana sútra, who is a student of the Riksákhá, who is versed in the Vedas, Vedánta and Ágamas, who is wise, who is acquainted with the Dharma prescribed in all the Ágamas (scriptures), who is devoted to the six sacraments, the village known on earth as Pólépalli, situated in the great kingdom of Konḍavíḍu, in the district of Kochérlakóṭa alias Yeruva náḍu, lying to the east of the village named Lakshmípuram, to the south of the large village Chandavaram, to the west of the village Chákicherla, and north of Rudrasamudram—adorned with the surname Achyuténdrapuram—free from all taxes, up to its four boundaries everywhere, together with the eight enjoyments, to wit, treasures, hidden deposits, stones and other things, abounding in all kinds of produce, to be enjoyed as a single share, together with its trees, possessing wells, cisterns, ponds and tanks—to be enjoyed in succession by sons, grandsons, and other descendants as long as the sun and the moon last—subject to gift, mortgage and sale.

V. 49. This is the edict of Achyutaráya whose kingship was bestowed by Achyuta (Vishnu), who grants the desires of the learned, and who curbs the conceit of his enemies.

V. 50. At the command of Achyuténdra Mahárája, Sabhápati composed this copper-plate edict in sweet verse.

V. 51. The artizan Śrí Víranáchárya, son of Mallana, engraved (this) copperplate edict of Achyuténdra Maháraya.

COPPER-PLATE No. 11.

[Grant of Penubarti.]

Note.

This was received through M.R.Ry. Rám Mohun Singh, Taluk Sheristadar, from the Village Munsif of Penubarti, Rápur taluk. There were three plates which were dug up long ago, and only one plate is now to be found. It is engraved on only one side and contains 34 lines or so in Nandinágari, identical with the first 34 lines of the Pólépalli grant.

COPPER-PLATE No. 12. (A.D. 1438–39 ?)

[Telugu. Grant from Varadarájasvámi temple at Kocherlakóṭa, Darsi Division. The years do not agree.]

TRANSLATION.

May there be prosperity ! Hail ! On the 15th of the bright half of Mágha of the year Vijaya, corresponding to the year 1360 of the illustrious, victorious and prosperous Ṣálivâhana Ṣaka era, Rája Ṣrí Velugóṭi Kastúri Rangapati Náyaningáru presented fields as a mányam (to wit) eight Kuchchalas of dry land and wet land sowable with 18 túms of paddy, to Varadarájasvámi of Kocherlakóṭa, who is the lord of all the crores of worlds, for offerings and worship with a lamp, and two maunds a month for lighting the perpetual lamp. He has presented this on the holy occasion of a lunar eclipse. Therefore, any one failing to maintain the charity will incur the sin of killing his parents, cows and Brahmans at Benáres.

COPPER-PLATE No. 13. (A.D. 1541–42.)

[Yadavalli grant of Achyuta. S.S. 1463.]

Note.

The subjoined inscription is edited from the original copperplates preserved in the Collector's office at Nellore. They are three in number. The engraving is on both sides of the second plate, but only on one side of plates 1 and 3. In the last plate there is blank space in the middle. The plates are 11 inches long and 8 inches wide.

The characters are Nandinágari excepting the words "Śrí Virúpáksha" at the end which are in large Canarese characters. The language is Sanskrit except in the portion giving the boundaries of the village granted which is in Telugu. The Sanskrit portion except the initial invocation to Gaṇéśa is in verse. The text is full of mistakes and obscure in places.

This inscription is identical with the Pólépalli grant down to line 72; in it however occur two additional verses, viz., 8 and 9 which are found in the Hampi inscription of Krishnaráya. (E.I., Vol. I., p. 361.)

The grant proper begins in the middle of the third plate and records that Achyuténdra being on the bank of the Tungabhadra, in the presence of the deity Virúpáksha, on the 12th lunar day of the bright half of Kártika—the day when Vishnu rises from sleep—in S.S. 1463, in the cyclic year Plava, gave the village named Yadavalli, situated in the síma of Pánganáḍu attached to Udayagiri (province), in Chirumana sthala, to a learned Brahman Tirumala Bhaṭṭa, son of Bhairava Bhaṭṭa, of the Kauṇḍinya gótra, of the Ápastamba sútra and the Yajuṣ Śákhá.

The village was consequently surnamed Achyuténdrapuram. A village named Dhárávali was given for its support.

The donee is said to have blessed Achyuta after receiving the gift.

The poet and engraver of this as of Pólépalli grant were Sabhápati and Víranáchárya respectively.

Translation.

Vs. 1 to 7. Same as in Pólépalli grant.

V. 8. Oh Wonder! Though he was the son of the glorious Dévakí (like Krishna), though he had lotus eyes (like Vishnu), though he obtained tribute (Bali) by valiant deeds which were able to conquer the three worlds (as Vishnu who conquered Bali by three strides extending over the three worlds), though he bore in his hand the conch and the discus (like Vishnu), he became still more celebrated by the name of 'Íṣvara,[1] as he acquired prosperity (bhúti),[1] universal respect, and the daughter of a king!

V. 9. Like another sun, fond of dwelling only on earth, rising day and night, surrounded by poets and learned men, fond of war, exceedingly renowned from the eastern to the western ocean, from the bridge to Mount Méru, he killed the enemies the Mandéhas,[2] and was resplendent, eclipsing the celestial trees by his gifts.

[1] Íṣvara (Ṣiva) had ashes (bhúti), universal worship and Párvati (daughter of a mountain).

Bhúbrit = (1) a king, (2) a mountain.

[2] The Mandehas are Rákshasas who endeavoured to destroy the sun.

[Then follow verses identical with verses 8 to 36 of the Pólépalli grant with slight variations.]

V. 37. In the Ṣáliváhana Ṣaka year, reckoned in order by 1,000, 400, and 63, (i.e., 1463), in the year Plava, in the excellent month Kártika, on the 12th tithi, the day when Vishnu rises from sleep, at a holy time and on an auspicious day.

V. 38. Being on the bank of Tungabhadrá, in the presence of Vírúpáksha, in the hall of gifts which is the abode of the great tree of paradise and other (celestial) trees,

V. 38½. King Achyuténdra, serene, and magnanimous, (gave the following village),

V. 39. to the descendant of the Kaundinya gótra, student of the excellent Ápastamba sútra, who is glorious, student of Yajus Sákhá, who is brilliant in virtues,

V. 40. to Tirumala Bhaṭṭa, son of Bhairava Bhaṭṭa, who is well versed in the Tantras, Logic, and Mahábháshya (grammar),

V. 41. who has studied, taught, and retains in his memory history and the ṣástras, whose intellect is able to distinguish Dharma from Adharma,

V. 42. who is fit to receive gift of land, who is the foremost of Brahmans, who is modest and eminent, to the intelligent man named Tirumala Bhaṭṭa,

Vs. 43 to 47. The village named Yadavalli, situated in the ṣíma named Pánganáḍu attached to Udayáchala (Udayagiri), in the sthala of the village named Chirumana, to the north of that village, possessing all estimable qualities, bearing the surname Achyuténdrapuram, beautiful and marked by all excellences, and the village named Dhárávali for the maintenance of that village, together with its treasures, hidden deposits, minerals, everything that is and that may be discovered, and water, with the akshiní and the ágámi, together with the eight enjoyments, with its wells, cisterns, ponds and banks, to be enjoyed by sons and grandsons, and other descendants in succession as long as the moon and sun last.

V. 48. Achyuténdra Mahárája, who is worthy of honour by intelligent men, being surrounded by many assiduous and amiable scholars, who follow the path of the Ṣrautas, who excel in eloquence, and who are headed by the domestic chaplain, joyfully gave with libation of water and gift of gold.

V. 49. Then Tirumala Bhaṭṭa with a pleased mind blessed him saying "Achyuténdra Mahárája, may you have long life."

V. 50. The boundaries of the agrahára in the direction east, &c., are described in the colloquial language (Telugu) in order by their respective marks.

Lines 92 to 96. (Here come the boundaries in Telugu written in Sanskrit characters.)

V. 51. This is the edict of Achyutaráya who satisfies the desires of learned men, and curbs the pride of mind of foes, and whose prosperity (kingship) was bestowed by Achyuta (Vishnu).

V. 52. Under the orders of Achyuténdra Mahárâya, Sabhápati composed this copper-plate inscription in sweet verse.

V. 53. At the bidding of Achyuténdra Mahárâya, the artizan Ṣrí Víranáchárya, the son of Mallana engraved this copper-plate edict.

[The grant closes with five of the usual benedictory and imprecatory verses.]

Copper-plate No. 14.

[Mámiḍipúnḍi grant of Sadáṣivaráya. S.S. 1471. A.D. 1549–50.]

Note.

The grant consists of three plates, the first and last of which are engraved on the inner side only, while the middle is engraved on both sides. They have raised rims to protect the writing and are connected by a ring on which there is a seal representing a boar, the sun and the moon.

The writing of the inscription is Nandinágari throughout except in the case of the final words Śrí

[1] Read ऽलिखत्तत्. [2] Read षष्टिवर्षं. [3] Read भोग्या.
[4] Read ग्राह्या. [5] Read पालनयो.

Virúpáksha. The writing is crowded with the exception of the usual opening words 'Śrí Gaṇádhipatayénámah.' The whole is in Sanskrit verse. The boundaries however of the village granted are given in Telugu.

The inscription is one of Sadáśivaráya and bears a general resemblance to the British Museum plates of the same king (E.I., Vol. IV., pages 12–22), and the first forty-two verses in both are identical.

Vs. 1 to 42 give the genealogy of Sadáśivaráya. Vs. 43 and 44 give the date of the grant. Vs. 45–49 describe the donee Ácharayya, a learned Brahman, son of Anantayárya.

Vs. 49 to 56 state that the village of Mámiḍipúnḍi, situated in Udayagiri rájya, in Pákanáḍu and in Sarvapalli śíma, and surnamed Śrí Rangarájapuram, was granted with the usual rights.

Vs. 57 to 67 give the genealogy of Timmarája, at whose request Sadáśiva made the gift, and contain a eulogistic account of his virtues.

Thus Timmarája was the younger brother of Ráma II. Tirumala is the general form of the name.

The British Museum grant was made at the request of Ráma II, ruler of the Carnatic.

After V. 70 the boundaries of Mámidipúndi the village granted are given in Telugu written in Sanskrit characters.

V. 71 says that Sadáṣivaráya made the gift.

Vs. 72 and 73 give the name of the composer and the engraver, viz., Sabhápati Svayambhú and Ṣrí Víraṇáchárya, respectively.

The inscription closes with five imprecatory verses.

TRANSLATION.

[The first forty-two verses are not translated as being identical with those of the British Museum plates of the same king—see E.I., Vol. IV, pp. 12–22.]

Vs. 43 and 44. In the Ṣaka year, reckoned by the moon (1), the horses (7), the oceans (4), and the moon (1), i.e., (1471), in the year Saumya, in the month of Ṣrávana, on Monday the holy 12th tithi of the bright fortnight, being on the banks of the Tungabhadra in the presence of Viṭṭhaléṣvara, (Sadáṣivaráya gave).

Vs. 45 to 49. To the scholar named Áchárayya, who is a very tree of paradise born from the milk-ocean of the Gautama gótra, who is a lion to the elephants which are his controversialists, who is of the excellent Ápastamba sútra, who is glorious, who is a student of Yajuṣ ṣákhá, whose mind is always devoted to the performance of the six sacraments, whose armour is the Véda, whose dictum settles disputes regarding the six Ṣástras, who has studied the established doctrine of the Vaishnava scriptures, who is a Brahmavádi (Vedántist), who is the expounder of the meaning of the Ṣrí Bháshya to classes of distinguished disciples, whose mind is resplendent through taking refuge at the lotus feet of Śrí Venkatéśa, who is the excellent son of the illustrious Anantayárya, who is upright, and whose speech is true and pleasant.

Vs. 49 to 56. The village named Mámiḍipúṅḍi, otherwise named the famous Śrírangarájapuram, situated in Udayáchala (Udayagiri) rájya, in Pákanáḍu, in the síma named Saryapalli, possessed of great fame, lying to the east of the excellent village Tállapúḍi, to the south of the well-defined boundary of the two villages Piḍitapólu and Musiḍikáḍu, to the west of the proper boundary of the two villages Nellaṭúr and Krishnaráyapaṭṭanam, and to the north of the village named Mutkúr, rich in all kinds of corn, up to its four boundaries everywhere, with its treasures, hidden deposits, minerals (stones), actuals, outstandings and water, with its akshiní and ágámi, abounding in trees, having cisterns, wells, ponds, embankments, and gardens, as a sarvamánya to be enjoyed as a single share, to be enjoyed by sons, grandsons and other descendants of the grantee in succession as long as the moon and sun endure, subject to gift, mortgage and sale and subject to transfer.

V. 57. There was a king of great prowess, who was a very tree of paradise on earth, Bukka of the famous Áravíḍu (city). His wife was Ballámbiká as the daughter of Pulóma was of Purandara (Indra).

V. 58. From him was born Rámarája as Káma from the lotus-eyed Lord of all the worlds (Vishnu). His queen was Lakkámbiká, blessed, the gem of the world of kings in virtues, as Rati (wife of Káma).

V. 59. From him was born the excellent king Śrí Rangarája, the gem of the lunar race, who by his splendour obtained the position of the central gem (lordship) in the middle of the necklace consisting of provincial chiefs (i.e., he became the lord of provincial chiefs).

V 21615 : 72
No. 114

V. 60. The queen of this (king), who was accomplished in gifts, was Tirumalámbiká, as Dévaséná was of Sénání (Kumára), and as Damayanti was of Nala.

V. 61. In consequence of his many austerities, he had a son, king Ṣri Rámarája, the light of the lunar race. To the extent that his splendour shone in the world, even the eyes of the ladies of his enemies became white (devoid of collyrium).

V. 62. Resplendent is his younger brother Timmarája, the outer yard of whose house is wet with the water poured out on the occasion of gifts, and by the shower of whose arrows the fire which is the valour of all kings is quenched.

V. 63.[1] Whose enemies in battle, being made to move round by the array of his troops, became cowards, like wives showing signs of love, having tremor, perspiration and horripilation.

Vs. 64 to 68. Complying with the request of this hero Timmarája, who is accomplished in gifts and virtuous, who is the treasury of mercy, who is anṭembaraganḍa (the disgracer of those of whom the birudas are proclaimed), who is of the lunar race, who is the ornamental gem of the Átréya gótra, who is the supporter of the Dharma (promulgated by) Manu, who is a sun to the collection of lotuses which are scholars, who has vanquished the valour of his enemies, who resembles Nahusha, who is Nánávarṇaṣrímanḍálikaganḍa (conqueror of chieftains of various castes), who has the biruda ébirudaráyaráhuta-

[1] Verse 62 is obscure. The meaning given is that suggested by Dr. Prof. Kielhorn in B.M. plate grant. Makaránkita = (1) full of love, or (2) made to move round by the makara (array) of his troops.

vesyaikabhujanga (the unique paramour of the prostitutes who are the troopers of kings possessing all kinds of birudas), whose pleasure is to destroy chiefs having birudas, who is victorious, who has the biruda Dharaní-varáha, (the boar that supports the earth) as he is famed for supporting the earth, and who is the dwelling house of modesty, liberality, magnanimity and faith.

V. 69. Sadáṣivaráya, who deserves to be honoured intelligent men, surrounded by many assiduous and amiable scholars, who are followers of the Ṣrauta, who excel in speech, and who are headed by the domestic chaplain, joyfully gave with libation of water and gift of gold.

V. 70. The boundaries of the village in the directions east, etc., with their respective marks are written in order in the provincial language (Telugu).

(Telugu.)

The eastern boundary of Mámiḍipúnḍi (is) the bund between Nérarladoruvu and Alluladoruvu in Nuyyalagutta at the junction of Krishnaráyapaṭṭanam and Nelaṭúr.

South-east: the anthill at the junction of Krishnaráyapaṭṭanam, Mutukúru and Mámiḍipúnḍi.

South: the white stone in the bed of Pinacheruvu at the junction of Mámiḍipúnḍi and Mólúru.

On the south-west: Yallagunṭa at the junction of Mámiḍipúnḍi and Móluru.

On the west: the rough stone at the junction of Mámiḍipúnḍi and Tállapúḍi.

On the north-west: the rough stone to the north of the Daipyálavánigunṭa, at the junction of Mámiḍipúnḍi and Piḍitipólu.

On the north : Chauṭagunṭa at the junction of Mámidipúndi and Musidikádu.

On the north-east : the balusu (Cunthium parviflorum according to Brown) tree beyond the Kallaṭivágu at the junction of Mámidipúndi and Nelaṭúr.

(Sanskrit.)

V. 70. This is the charter of Sadáṣivaráya, who is charming, the best of kings, the foremost of the famous, who is like Ráma in wielding the bow, and who is devoted to unlimited gifts.

V. 71. At the bidding of the glorious Sadáṣivaráya, the court poet Sabhápati Svayambhú thus composed the text of the copper plate edict written in a simple and charming style.

V. 72. Under the orders of Sadáṣivaráya, the engraver Ṣrí Viraṇáchárya son of Víraṇa engraved the copper-plate edict.

[Five imprecatory verses.]

Copper-plate No. 15.

[Kapalur grant S.S. 1258. (A.D. 1336-37.)]

[From the Collector's office, Nellore.]

Note.

The following grant is published from the original copper-plates which are kept in the Collector's office, Nellore. The plates are three in number of which the first and the third are engraved on only one side.

The engraving is clear but in places some letters appear to have been erased. The character is Nandinágari but the formation of the letters is quite modern and in certain letters it is very similar to Dévanágari. This fact shows that the document is a fabrication.

There are numerous mistakes in the inscription. These are pointed out in the foot-notes.

The grant consists of fifty Sanskrit verses, and a portion in Telugu giving the boundaries of the village granted.

The first five verses are invocations to deities. Vs. 6 to 13 give the mythical genealogy of the first Vijayanagar dynasty tracing it to the moon. The first king was Bukka, whose wife was Mégámbiká. Next came his son Sangama whose wife was Gálámbiká; he had five sons Harihara, Bukka, Kampa, Mára and Muddana. (Vs. 14 to 18). The next king was the eldest of these, viz., Harihara. V. 19 states that he ruled the whole earth having conquered all the quarters of the earth and that his capital was Kunjarakóna (the elephant valley).

Vs. 20 to 27 relate the circumstances under which Harihara came to found the city of Vidyánagar. Once when out hunting in the forest to the south of the Tungabhadra, he saw a hare attack a dog and wondered. Thinking it to be a wonderful event and perceiving that the hare was Virúpáksha, he went to and sought counsel of the sage Vidyáranya, who was practising austerities in the temple of Virúpáksha. The hermit said that the place was fit to be the residence of a royal dynasty, asked him to build a city called Vidyánagar and prophesied the future glory of his race.

Next we come to the grant proper which states that Harihara gave an Agrahára named Hariharapuram to a Brahman named Ananta Súraya, son of Sankukéśava, of the Viṣvámitra gótra and the Áṣvaláyana sútra. Vs. 39 to 41 say that he divided the village into 60 shares, kept 30 for himself and gave the other 30 to Brahmans. Only 5, however, of these sharers holding 11 shares are given in the inscription (Vs. 41 to 45).

V. 46 says that boundaries were fixed with stones stamped with the seal bearing the figure of the Vámana incarnation (dwarf).

Then there is a Telugu passage giving the boundaries and the inscription closes with three of the usual imprecatory verses.

The date of the inscription is S.S. 1258. V. 29 says that the grant was made after the coronation of the king.

Translation.

Adoration be to Ganádhipatí (Ganéṣa)!

V. 1. Salutation be to Ṣiva, who is charming with the moon, as with a chámara, which kisses his lofty head, and who is the main pillar of the creation of the city of the three worlds.

V. 2. We salute for the fruition of our desire the god who is the author of the art of the composition of the Véda, whose eye in the forehead destroyed the pride of Káma, who has his consort (in) the (left) half of his body.[1]

V. 3. We adore the elephant-faced (Ganéṣa), who is a young pigeon in the mansion which is the Véda (i.e., who is to be known by the Véda), who is the swan on the lotus which is the mind of those who are free from passion[2] (and) who has the eyes: the enemy of the mandéhas (i.e., the sun), the moon and fire.

V. 4. May this god, the eternal, the Lord of Boars (the Boar incarnation of Vishnu), whose Kétaki flower in the form of a tusk bears the whole earth like a female[3] bee (or swarm of bees) and who is praised by the gods, protect (you).

V. 5. I praise the goddess of speech (Sárasvatí), whose body resembles (in splendour) the sky with its autumnal clouds,[4] whose hair is decked with the digit of the moon, who is worshipped by Ṣuka and other sages, who caresses a parrot and who has a lute.

V. 6. The son[5] of this ocean (milk-ocean) was the moon, the crest-jewel of Ṣiva, whom now the learned call the left eye of Vishnu.[6]

[1] Avaródha generally means harem, here it means wife.

[2] The expression means also the swan of the lotuses found in the Mánasa lake which is free from dirt.

[3] The earth which is black resting on the Boar's tusk which is white resembles a female bee (which is black) resting on the Kétaki flower (which is white).

[4] Sarasvatí is supposed to be white.

[5] Kulatantu the thread or perpetuator of the family. The moon is supposed to have been produced from the ocean at the time of churning.

[6] The moon is said to be the left eye and the sun the right eye as Vishnu.

V. 7. From him (the moon) arose (one) whose name was Budha, the greatness of whose intellect was wonderful, whom the wise always call the ocean of the nectar of knowledge.

V. 8. In course of succession a certain ruler of the circle of the earth adorned that race (viz.) Purúravas, who resembled the flower-arrowed (Káma) in beauty, who brought under his control Urvasi (a celestial nymph) on account of the existence of intense love.

V. 9. From him there was a king famed as Áyu, who caused Mahápadam simultaneously to (his) enemies and suppliants in Sangrámabhúmi.

[NOTE.—There are puns on the words Sangrámabhúmi and Mahápadam. In the case of enemies he caused a great calamity in Sangrámabhúmi, i.e., the battle field: in the case of suppliants he caused to be produced an exalted position in Sangrámabhúmi, i.e., a country abounding in excellent villages]

V. 10. From him sprang Nahusha (lit. whose name was Nahusha), who by the strength of his arm not only ruled the sea-girt earth in such a manner that his feet were adorned by kings but also the kingdom of the dwellers of heaven (the gods).

(The allusion is that Nahusha once obtained the position of Indra).

V. 11. Born to him who surpassed in mercy, the king named Yayáti, famous (and) excelling in compassion, sported with Dévayáni, as the vanquisher of the demons (Vishṇu) with Lakshmî.

V. 12. From him (Yayáti), who was the lord of the four seas, sprang a son versed in the sixty-four arts; resplendent is the king named Yadu, possessed of splendour, and strong-armed.

V. 13. Kings arose who were pearls of his race and who were possessed of the four members of the army (chariots, elephants, horses and infantry); the moonlight which was the smile of the wives of his enemies was dispelled by the sun which was the prowess of Yadu.

[NOTE.—The meaning is that Yadu destroyed his enemies and their wives were thus deprived of their cheerfulness.]

V. 14. In their race was a certain king named Bukka whose valour was difficult to rival. Mégámbiká was that king's wife as the daughter of the ocean (Lakshmí) was of Vishnu.

V. 15. From him was born Sangama, the might of whose arm was sung everywhere, whom they here call indeed Kártavírya in valour, the Himálayas in courage, and the sun in splendour.

V. 16. Gálámbiká was his wife as the daughter of the mountain (Párvatí) was of Mahéṣvara (Śiva), as the Vidarbha princess (Damayantí) was of Nala, as Lakshmí was of Vishnu, and as the daughter of Pulóma was of Indra.

V. 17. Five excellent sons, who were lions to the elephants which were wicked kings, and who resembled the five-arrowed (Káma) in beauty, were begotten by that blessed king on that queen.

V. 18. They were indeed King Harihara, King Kampa, King Bukka, King Mára and King Muddana. But the eldest (i.e., Harihara) amongst them who were of spotless virtues, resembling Yudishṭhira in splendour, attained the sovereignty of the earth consisting of the nine continents (lit. pieces).

V. 19. Having conquered all the quarters of the world beginning with (the territories of) the Angas and Kalingas, possessed of Indra's splendour, and being honoured by kings, he ruled the whole earth at the city of Kunjarakóṇa. (This is probably a Sanskrit rendering of Ánegonḍa and means the elephant-valley.)

V. 20. Once through desire of hunting, having crossed the (river) Tungabhadrá with his army, having reached its bank, the king saw a forest to the south of it.

V. 21. Having beheld in that forest a certain hare engaged in copulation, which was fierce and was biting a dog and (its companion)[1] the female hare, the lord of men (the king) wondered.

V. 22. Having perceived this (hare) to be Śrí Virúpákshadéva associated with Pampádévi, and humble with devotion, king Harihara, went to the hermit Vidyáraṇya the incarnation of spiritual knowledge, whose austerity was honoured and who was like another glorious Mahéṣána (Śiva), (who resided) near his (Virúpáksha's) temple.

V. 23. Having saluted in his vicinity with reverence (Vidyáranya) who was the store-house of austerity, and the receptacle of knowledge and arts, and who was very praiseworthy, he related this incident whose explanation was very wonderful.

V. 24. Having smiled a little, (Vidyáraṇya) the store-house of knowledge of the three times (past, present and future), the best of ascetics, said (as follows) to that hero: "Oh king, this country deserves to be the residence of a family of great kings and the sole source of great power.

Vs. 25 and 26. Oh Lord, found a city named Vidyá, as beautiful as Alaka (Kubéra's city), which shall be a forest of learning (Irá = Sárasvatí, learning); and having reached the city having nine gates, and endowed with the glory of Indra, you bear (will bear) the whole earth on your arm which resembles the lord of serpents (Sésha) and which has attained the state of (has become) the pleasure-grove of the Ṣrí (goddess) of war who has been captured (by you) in battles." He thus instructed the king.

[1] The passage here is obscure. The reading is conjectural. The fact of the male hare attacking a dog caused surprise in the mind of the king who thereupon thought it must be a holy place where such a thing could happen and went to Vidyáraṇya to seek advice.

V. 27. Having accordingly obeyed his command, occupying the seat of kings (throne), conspicuous with an excellent white umbrella, having indeed performed gifts which were even greater than the sixteen gifts (prescribed in the Law Books) he, king Harihara, shone in the extensive town named Vidyá.

V. 28. In the year of (the Ṣaka) king (Nripa) having the number 8, 5, 2, 1, (i.e., 1258), in the bright fortnight of Mádhava (Vaiśákha) of (the year) Dhátṛí, under the auspicious Pushya star and Hari lagna and on the 7th (tithi).

V. 29. After the festival of coronation, being in the auspicious presence of Pampá Virúpáksha Mahéṣvara, the great king who was truthful and valiant founded an Agrahára.

V. 38. King Harihara, who is worthy of honour among wise men, joyfully gave with gift of gold and libation of water.

Vs. 33, 34 and 35. the great village Kápalur, fit to be the residence of wise men, situated in the rájya (kingdom) named Chendragiri in Paḍanáḍu síma (district), in the holy and beautiful sthala (place) of the river Svarnamukhyá (Mukhi is the usual form), to the east of Panalúru, to the south of Chilalúru, to the west of Gunupádu, and to the north of Ánamédu, well known by the surname Hariharapuram, as a sarvamánya, up to its four boundaries everywhere.

V. 36. Along with its hidden treasures, deposits, stone, actuals, outstandings and water, with the akshini, and ágámi, as an éka bhógyam, together with its trees.

V. 37. Together with its ponds, wells, tanks and embankments, to be enjoyed in succession by sons, grandsons and others as long as the moon and stars endure.

Vs. 30, 31 and 32. To Ananta Súraya, son of Ṣanku Késava Bhaṭṭa, of the kula (gótra) of Viṣvámitra, of the Áśvaláyana sútra, student of Rikśákhá, versed in the Véda, the Védánta, and the Ágamas, devoted to the good conduct laid down in the Śrauta and Smárta (sútras) intelligent, who was a fit recipient of gift of land, the foremost of Brahmans, modest, distinguished, famous and great-souled.

Vs. 39 and 40. The owner of the village having received the agrahára, having divided 60 vriṭṭis into two halves, and having retained one half of those (for himself), joyfully presented 30 vriṭṭis to Brahmans. The vritti holders with their gótra and sútra are—

V. 46. The boundaries demarcated with stones stamped with the illustrious Vámana (dwarf) seal are described in the provincial language (Telugu) by their respective marks.

[Here follows a Telugu passage giving the boundaries.]

V. 47. This is the edict of King Harihara, the sole Párijáta of the earth, whose greatness is sung by the humming of the bees which are the conquests of all kings.

Vs. 48 to 50 are three of the usual imprecatory verses.

COPPER-PLATE No. 16. (A.D. 1515–16.)

Nágulavaram grant of Krishnaráya, S.S. 1437.

[From the Collector's office, Nellore.]

Note.

The following transcript was made from the original copper-plates which are preserved in the Collector's office, Nellore. They are five in number measuring 9 inches × 7¼ inches. Their tops are a little raised and have holes for a ring which is not now in existence. The inscription is in Nandinágari and with the exception of the portion giving the boundaries is in Sanskrit verse. The letters are very badly shaped and the text is full of mistakes.

The grant is one of Krishṇadévaráya. The first 46 lines which give an account of his predecessors are the same as in other similar grants (vide Pólépalli grant) and have not been transcribed. The next portion says that Krishṇadévaráya defeated Vírabhadra Gajapati, son of Rudra of Koṇḍavíḍu, captured him, and made him his servant. We know that this was in S.S. 1437. The date of the grant was 1437; evidently it immediately followed the capture of Koṇḍavíḍu.

The gift was of Nágulavaram to a Brahman astronomer named Súra Bhaṭṭa, son of Rámabhaṭṭa and of a field named Timmayapáḷem and measuring 2,250 kuṇṭas for the maintenance of that village. It was made at the request of Ganga Reḍḍi or Gangádhara, son of Viṭṭa, who had the birudas Karpúravasantaráya, Kancharkaládri, Basava Śankara, Ghantánáda, Suhémádridánachintámani, Rájavéśyá Bhujanga, Chanchumallúra Chúrakára, Jagannabbaraganḍa and Rúpanáráyaṇa. He was evidently a Reḍḍi chief who accepted Krishnaráya's lordship at the very commencement of his exploits on the east coast.

His name does not, it seems, appear in any other recorded inscription.

Some of the birudas are those of the Reḍḍi chiefs:—Karpúra Vasantaráya, the king of spring; the king evidently participated in the spring festival in which camphor used to be scattered about.

Kanchárkaládri—is not intelligible.

Basava Śankara—a form of Śiva.

Ghantánáḍa—who has the right to be heralded by a bell.

Hémádridána Chintámani—a philosopher's stone in giving the gifts prescribed by Hémádri, i.e., one who gave all these gifts.

Rájavéśyá bhujanga—the paramour to the prostitutes who are other kings.

Chanchumallúra Chúrákára—the destroyer of Chanchumallúra (?)

Jagannabbaraganḍa—the sole hero in the world.

Rúpanáráyaṇa—a Náráyaṇa in beauty.

Translation.

The first 46 lines are not translated.

Vs. 1 and 2. In the Śáliváhana Śaka year 1437, in the year Yuva, in the month of Śrávaṇa, in the bright fortnight, on the holy full moon day, (i.e., on the day of a lunar eclipse (lit. when the moon was swallowed by Ráhu).

V. 3. Being in the presence of Mallikárjuna at the shrine of Bháskara in Śríśaila (Krishnadévaráya made the following grant).

Vs. 3 to 5. Having captured alive in battle Vírabhadra Mahárâya, son of king Rudra, in the city of Konḍavíḍu and having made him who had come under his control by the strength of his arm his servant, Krishnadéva Mahárâya, king of the Carnatic, (became) renowned.

Vs. 5 to 10. King Gangá Reḍḍi, who was the moon of the ocean of the glorious Panṭa race, the son of king Viṭṭa (Chinta ?), the best of rulers of the earth, who never even in a dream even uttered the words "There is nothing" (i.e., I cannot give you anything) to suppliants; he has the biruda "Santatakarpúra Vasantaráya" on earth; his seal (bears) the titles "Kanchárkaládriráya" and "Basava Śankara," the lord who is heralded by a bell, who is a glorious "Hémádridána Chintámani," who is adorned with "Ráyavéśyábhujanga" and other birudas, who is "Chanchumalluchúrakára," and who has the biruda "Rúpa Náráyana;"

V. 10. Who is resplendent with the biruda "Jagannabbaraganḍa."

Vs. 10 and 10½. He, Gangádhára, being devoid of fear, pleased Krishnaráya, the lord of the Carnatic, with the valiant deeds achieved by his arm; beholding him he said:—

Vs. 11 to 13. "O King Krishnaráya, whose lotus feet are made resplendent by the rubies of the diadems of kings, who hast the biruda 'Múruráyaraganda,' "O my Lord, many forts will come to us this year"; thus often, O my Lord, the Brahman (named) Súraya formerly said; whose grandfather is Ráyaja. He is versed in phonetics, and in the science of omens, he is skilled in predicting the future, he is a master of the mantras and knows the meaning of the Védas.

V. 14. Seeing his proficiency in (the science of) the movements of the planets, being delighted in mind, I shall give this Brahman the village Nágulavaram.

V. 15. May the village bringing fame to you, O my Lord, and an illustrious copper-plate charter for it be granted by my Lord to the astronomer Súraya."

Vs. 16 and 17. Having heard this, having at once presented a quantity of cloths and ornaments to the wise Súryárya, and having pleased (him), Krishnaráya said "I will give the village Nágulavaram mentioned by you to him" and granted (it).

Vs. 17 to 21. Krishnadéva Mahárâya, who is worthy of honour among wise men, being surrounded by many assiduous and amiable learned men who are followers of the path of Dharma, who excel in eloquence and who are headed by the family priest, joyfully gave with libation of water and gift of gold, the village as a sarvamánya, up to its four boundaries everywhere, with its hidden treasures, deposits, stones, actuals, outstandings and water, with its akshini and áyámi, with its ponds, wells, tanks and embankments, as an 'ékabhógyam,' with its trees, to be enjoyed in succession by sons, grandsons, etc., (of the grantee) as long as the moon and the sun endure.

Vs. 22 and 23. Having granted the village, the king gave a copper-plate edict appertaining to it. The description of that village Nágulavaram is now given.

Vs. 23 to 26. It is situated in the rájya of Udayáchala (Udayagiri), and in the ṣíma named Jaladanki; it is well known and is included in Pákanáḍu.[1] It lies to the east of the village Jakképalli, Gumudvúru, to the south of the hamlets named Ámódúlu and Tállúru, to the south-west of the agrahára Biṭragunṭa, to the west of the town Chágavólu, to the north-west of the town Dámavaram, and to the north-east of the village Vítupóḍu.

Vs. 27 and 28. The owner of the village is next written. Súrabhaṭṭa of the Rébha Kásyapa gótra, son of Śrí Rámabhaṭṭa, intelligent, follower of the Rig Véda, versed in the (science of), the movements of the stars, passed master in yantras (astronomical and other instruments), an astronomer versed in the science of Yámala [Rudrayámala a certain treatise on mantra] and of good character.

V. 29. The Mahárâya and Gangá Reḍḍi having given the village,—May Súrayárya, the owner of the village, prosperously flourish for a long time on earth.

V. 30. This is the edict of the heroic Krishṇaráya, who is a very tree of paradise to suppliants on earth, and whose hand resembles in (making) gifts the tree of Balaṣásana (Indra) (i.e., the tree of paradise).

V. 31. By the order of Krishnadéva Mahárâya, Sabhápati (the Court poet) composed this sweet composition of the copper-plate edict.

V. 32. Next are described in the provincial language (Telugu) the boundaries—the banks, trees and stone pillars of that village beginning from the east.

[Here comes a long list in Telugu of the boundary marks of the village which it is unnecessary to translate.]

Stanzas 20, 21 and 22 of Pólépalli grant.

V. 33. In the Ṣaka year, reckoned by the sages (7), the Rámas (3), and the worlds (14), in 1437 (in Telugu figures), in the holy Yuva year, in the auspicious month named Śrávana, on the full moon tithi, when the moon had gone into the mouth of Ráhu (i.e., on the day of lunar eclipse), the victorious and glorious king Śrí Krishnaráya gave the village Nágulavaram to the astronomer Súra.

Vs. 34 to 36. For the subsistence of that village Nágulavaram the king gave a field named Timmayapálem measured up to the margin of the tank, situated in wet fields, having water, rich in paddy, marked by a stone idol of the múlasthána Ṣiva and measured with a pole of 32 feet in length. He granted 2,000 + $\frac{1}{4}$ (i.e., of 2,000) or 2,500 kuntas.

V. 36$\frac{1}{2}$. "Let the high-souled (Súraya) enjoy this (village) as long as the moon and stars endure."

V. 37. Having said this, the heroic Krishnaráya, king of kings, prosperously ruled the kingdom for a long time with fame, righteousness and valour.

Vs. 38 and 39 are two common imprecatory verses.

V. 40. They do not call poison, poison. The property of a Brahman is called poison. Poison kills one alone, but the property of a Brahman kills sons and grandsons.

Vs. 41 and 42 are two other common imprecatory verses.

COPPER-PLATE No. 17. (A.D. 1254–55.)

[Śárngapuram grant of Ṣárngadhara.]
(S.S. 1176.)

Note.

This grant is engraved on five copper-plates 10 inches × $5\frac{1}{4}$ inches connected by a ring whose exterior diameter is 4 inches. The ring bears a seal the figure on which is not clear owing to corrosion. The plates are all engraved on both sides and the edges have not been raised as in most grants. On the left of the first side of the first plate are figures of the chakra, śanku, and boar one below the other, and between the figure of the śanku and the boar is tne letter Śrí engraved in big type.

The character is Telugu and the language is Sanskrit verse with the exception of the part relating to the boundaries of the village which was granted. The writing is in a fair state of preservation. The letters on the first plate are small while those on the other plates are big. The writing is breadthwise. The first verse is an invocation to the Boar incarnation of Vishnu. Verse 2 says that there was a Kákati king by name Prólaya. Verses 3 to 7 relate to his grandson Gaṇapati. Verse 8 says that Gaṇapati's vassal was Mádhava, son of Sauri Suvara. From verse 9 it appears that he was the ruler of Addanki in Ongole taluk, Nellore district. Verse 9 says that Mádhava's son was Ṣárngadhara, of the Ṣálankáyana gótra. He is the donor of this grant—he was also known as Chakra Náráyaṇa[1].

The inscription next says that for the merit of his master (Gaṇapati) Śárngadhara granted the village of Ṣárngpuram to Brahmans with a gift of cash after making due obeisance to them. The date of the grant was Monday, the 10th tithi of the bright fortnight of Phálguna of the year Ánanda, corresponding to S.S. 1176. The year is given both in Telugu figures and by the usual method of reckoning by names denoting digits.

Forty-seven shareholders are enumerated with their gótra. Of these the first forty-two have equal shares; the last three are said to be nischala bháginas the meaning of which term is not clear; it probably means 'invariable shareholders' and the 43rd and 44th shareholders get 2 sh[illegible]es. E[illegible]h share consists of one gócharma. Verse 28 [illegible]at [illegible]harma = 10 nivartanas and 1 nivartana = 30 rods ([illegible] measured with a rod of 10 cubits (hasta).

N[illegible]s a description of the boundaries in Telugu. [illegible] 34 are 5 of the usual imprecatory verses.

At the end of line 87 is engraved the figure of a chakra.

The inscription then invokes the blessing of the Boar. At the beginning of line 88 is the figure of the boar.

The grant closes with a verse stating that king Ṣrí Chakra Náráyana (Ṣárngadhara) granted the village

---

[1] Chakra Náráyaṇa is simply a title of Ṣárngadhara.

Śárngapuram to learned Bráhmans. The plate was got from the archaka of the temple at Mannepalli of Darsi Division. We are told that a hamlet called Sárnapuram exists in the Ongole taluk.

TRANSLATION.

V. 1. Om! Hail. May the Boar, the glorious supporter of the earth (Vishnu), the beloved consort of his wife, viz., the earth, give (happiness) to all up to the mountain which encircles the earth who formerly, joyfully desiring to take her away (from the ocean), made his broad, delicate and white tusk which dispels misfortunes a present to her like a very beautiful kétaki flower.

V. 2. King Prólaya, who is the ornament of the glorious Kákati race, who is very renowned in the world, he alone is sung by poets as king Bali in (of) the Kali age.

V. 3. By the power of austerities performed (by him) formerly (i.e., in previous births), and by the austerities of the whole world there was born to that king a son who was a ruler of the world as if Mahádéva (Ṣiva) himself.

V. 4. This king was surely Mahádéva the lord of the Universe; if not, how indeed can Gaṇapatidéva himself have been his son?

V. 5. When king Gaṇapati, the store-house of knowledge and the embodiment of pleasure was born, the whole Universe opened (with joy) just as the lotus (opens) when the moon rises.

V. 6. His belly is not hanging (i.e., large like that of Gaṇapati, Gaṇésa), nor was there association with the double-tongued (i.e., snakes); nor is his face crooked. Oh wonder that he is called Gaṇapati by people!

V. 7. By fulfilling the desires of suppliants, by seizing the wealth of enemies and by protecting the host of kings he is surely Gaṇapati himself.

V. 8. There is a king Mádhava, who is a very bee delighting in the pollen which is the service of the lotuses which are his feet (of Ganapati), son of Sauri Suravara, brave by reason of being compassionate.

V. 9. There was born to the ruler of the city of Addanki a good son, a ruler of men, of the Ṣálankáyana gótra, destroyer of enemies, of excellent fame, named Śárngadhara (bearer of the discus).

V. 10. Honoured for his might resembling that of all the regents of the earth he always delighted all (his) subjects; he is praised as the moon by them.

V. 11. In Sáka whose year was Ánanda, reckoned by the tastes (6), the sages (7), the Ṣivas (11), in 1176 (in Telugu figures), on the 10th (tithi) of the bright fortnight of Tapasya (Phálguna), on Monday,

V. 12. Having respectfully summoned Brahmans who were thoroughly versed in the Vedas and vedangas, and who were endowed with virtues, and having honored (them) according to the prescribed rules,

V. 13. That king, having wished "May there be religious merit to my Lord," gave to them the village called Ṣárngapuram with a gift (of money).

V. 14. Having given the village up to the boundaries, along with the eight enjoyments, and with power and ownership, to these (Brahmans), he, possessed of modesty, said (as follows).

V. 15. "My folded hands are raised to the head (i.e., I give salutation) to those (rulers) who protect my charity whether (those) rulers are of my lineage, or of the lineage of my enemies or others."

V. 16. The recipients there (of the charity) are—

V. 26. All the (first) forty-two recipients are equal sharers. But the last three are invariable sharers (?)

V. 27. The middle two, Oppana (and the other) have here $\frac{1}{4}$ of 8, i.e., 2 shares (?)

For each of these a land measuring only one gocharma is apportioned.

V. 28. A nivartana consists of 30 rods measured with a rod of 10 cubits in length. Ten of those (nivartanas) is a gocharma. By gift of that (i.e., a gócharma), imperishable bliss accrues.

Then the marks of the boundaries (are given) in the provincial language (Telugu).

(Here follows a long passage giving the boundaries which it is unnecessary to translate).

[Imprecatory verses.]

V. 29. The earth has been given by many kings commencing with Sagara. Of whomsoever the land is, of him is the merit.

V. 30. A charity made even by an enemy should be protected with care. An enemy indeed is an enemy. Charity may not be the enemy of any one.

V. 31. Of giving (oneself) and of maintaining (another's grant), the maintenance (of another's grant) is superior to giving (oneself). By giving (oneself) one obtains heaven; (but) by protecting (another's gift) one gets imperishable bliss.

V. 32. He who resumes land given by himself or by another is reborn a worm in ordure for 60,000 years.

V. 33. Whoever misappropriates one cow, or one gem, or one inch of land even, goes to hell up to the dissolution of the elements.

V. 34. This general bridge of morality of kings should be followed constantly by you. Thus Rámachandra entreats again and again all these future kings.

May the illustrious Boar protect!

May there be great prosperity!

[Chéjerla grant of Dévaráya II, S.S. 1351.]
(A.D. 1428-29.)

From the Collector's office, Nellore.

Note.

The grant is engraved on five copper-plates $7\frac{3}{4}$ inches $\times$ $5\frac{3}{4}$ inches with curved tops. The ring connecting them now is an ordinary one and is apparently not the original one as it bears no seal. The first and the last plates are engraved on one side only while the others are engraved on both sides. The plates are numbered at the top in Telugu figures and raised at the rims to preserve the writing.

The characters are Nandinágari and the language is Sanskrit verse except in the case of the portion giving boundaries which is in Telugu. The whole writing is in an excellent state of preservation. On the second side of plate III two lines seem to have been engraved and then erased and there is consequently a blank space. There is a large number of mistakes in the text.

The grant is one of Pratápa Dévaráya (Dévaráya II) and after tracing the dynasty to the moon, who was the mind-born son of Vishnu, gives the following genealogy—

Harihara.
Dévaráya.
Vijaya Bukka.
Pratápa Dévaráya.

It was made at the request of Paṇṭa Mailára, who was the great grandson of Súra, the grandson of Póta, and the son of Mumbámbá and Mummaḍíndra. He was evidently a vassal chief of the Reḍḍi caste and the inscription says that he served Dévaráya in battle and gave him valuable presents. The king who was pleased with him offered him a boon, but the latter asked for the grant of a village to holy and learned Brahmans. Mailára had the birudas Dharanívaráha, Ghaṇṭánáda, and Chauhattamalla.

The date of the grant was the Śaivatami (Śivarátri) day of the month of Mágha in the year Kíḷaka in S.S. 1351. The grant was made in the temple of Virúpáksha, who resides in Hémakúta in Bháskarakshétra on the Tungabhadra.

The object of the grant was the village formerly named Pólavaram but designated Chéjerla at the time of the grant, and situated in Púginádu on the banks of the Kunḍi (Gunḍlakamma). It is the village Chéjerla in Ongole taluk. The Brahman sharers whose fathers, gotras and sákhás are given, were 54 and the shares were 80. Three shares were given to the deities, Rámésvara, Sóméśvara, Kéśava, Vighnéśvara and the goddess Puttalamma of Chéjerla.

The boundaries are given in Telugu and Sanskrit.

The grant concludes with some imprecatory verses and the colophon Śrí Virúpáksha.

Translation.

Adoration to Gaṇádhipati (Gaṇéśa.)

V. 1. May the illustrious primeval Boar, being carried upwards by whom (being married by whom) the earth became impregnated with gems, be auspicious to you!

V. 2. May the elephant (Gaṇéśa), whose trunk is always moist with flowings from his temples, having worshipped whom Śiva and others obtain the fruition desired (by them), bring you happiness!

Note.—These are puns on the words दान: and कर: Nityadánárdra-karah means also one whose hand is wet with constantly making gifts.

V. 3. May the moon, the store-house of ambrosia of the gods, wearing whose digit the lord of the Universe (Śiva) became Rájaśékhara (moon-crested), be a source of delight to you!

V. 4. From the moon who was born from the mind of the primeval man (Vishnu) arose the race of the Yadus in which, as the fruit of Vásudeva's merit, appeared Hari himself (in the form of Krishna) associated with the hosts of gods.

V. 5. In that pure race was born a king named Harihara, of pure character, just as the moon (was born) from the milk-ocean.

V. 6. The two (functions), the protection of the good and the punishment of the wicked, are indeed divided in (between) Hari (Vishnu) and Hara (Śiva); but the lord (Harihara) made these two functions one (i.e., combined them in himself).

V. 7. His son was the glorious Dévaráya, of great fortune, who attained glory, who was a very king of the gods (Indra) on earth, and who by constantly (making) gifts expunged the word "give" in the case of enemies (when addressed to them) and suppliants (when addressed by them).

V. 8. From him who was the store-house of virtue was born, as Jayanta from Indra, king Vijaya Bukka, who was eminent, by whom enemies were vanquished, and who resembled Vijaya (Arjuna).

V. 9. His son was Pratápa-Dévaráya, of unlimited glory, (and) accomplished in courting beauties, viz., fortune, fame, earth and Sarasvatí.

V. 10. Being enthroned at Vijayanagar which had come to him by the succession of his family, he conquered (both) internal and external enemies by his intellect and valour (respectively).

V. 11. Being designated by the term Rája on account of his pleasing men because he protects the system of castes. He protected the earth which has the four oceans for its girdle under one rule (umbrella) (i.e., as universal sovereign).

V. 12. Him the learned constantly call—Múruráya-raganda, (the champion or vanquisher of the three kings), Arirâyavibhálaka (the destroyer of hostile kings), and Hinduráya suratrána (a Sultan among Hindu kings).

V. 13. Formerly Ráma, son of Dasaratha, had (the attributes) magnanimity, fortitude, valour, courage, mercy, liberality, truthfulness and reverence; (but) now it is king Dévaráya (who possesses these virtues).

V. 14. King Mailára was assiduous in serving his (Dévaráya's) feet, with (his) wisdom, devotion, and valour, just as Hanumán was in respect of those of Ráma.

V. 15. Who was the great grandson of king Súra, who was the grandson of king Póta, who was the son of Mumbámba and Mummaḍíndra, and was of pure conduct.

V. 16. Who had the biruda Dharanívaráha, (the boar on earth), and was famed as Chauhattamalla (a hero whose strength is that of four elephants, or a hero resembling the four-armed, i.e., Vishnu). Panṭa Mailára caused fear to hostile provincial chiefs by the ringing of his bell.

V. 17. In this manner doing by various means what was pleasing and good to the king, destroying wicked kings by his wisdom and valour, always paying homage (to the king) with different kinds of gems and excellent articles, with his mind intent on (the king's) service, he caused delight to the mind (of the king).

V. 18. Then Pratápa Dévaráya, being pleased with his service and valour, and having honoured Mailára, joyfully granted him a boon.

V. 19. He, the victorious, asked a boon—not horses nor elephants, nor ornaments, nor wealth—but the good of his lord and of himself.

V. 20. "Oh king, honour with the grant of an excellent village those gods on earth (Brahmans), in whom Mahéṣvara and other gods reside, in whom the Védas with their Angas dwell, and who are devoted to religion."

V. 21. Then being thus requested by him king Mailára, king Dévaráya surnamed Pratápa, with a delighted mind.

V. 22. Being on the bank of the Tungabhadrá river in the holy shrine of Bháskara, in the presence of Virúpáksha who dwells on the Hémakúṭa,

V. 23. In the Śaka year, reckoned by the moon (1), the arrows (5), the fires (3), and the moon (1), (i.e., 1351), in the (cyclic) year Śrí Kílaka, in (the month of) Mágha, on the holy occasion relating to Śiva, the glorious lord Dévaráya joyfully gave to Brahmans the auspicious village, well known as Pólavaram, (situated) on the bank of the Kuṇḍi river (Gundlakamma), in the vishaya of Púnginádu, having surnamed it Chéjerla.

V. 24. The apportionment of the shares of the Brahmans, with their Śákhá, (school of the Véda), name and gótra, in this agrahára whose eight kinds of ownership and enjoyment were given to them is (hereunder) written. (List omitted.)

The marks of the boundaries of this village in the eight directions, commencing from the east and proceeding to the right, are written, as stated, in Sanskrit interspersed with the provincial language (Telugu), thus—

V. 54. On the east the boundary is the river Mudigunḍi which has large waves, extending from the north-eastern corner up to the south-eastern limit.

V. 55. Then on the resplendent southern side of that, from the south-east corner up to the limit of the path to Alúr, the boundary is the same river Mudigundi which flows on bright with rows of fish springing in it.

V. 56. The ancients call the unequalled channel which carries pure water from the path to Alúr up to the south-western corner the Pámulakálva and fix it as the boundary.

V. 57. Having made obeisance to the glorious Dévaráya, king Mailára, whose mercy is great, caused the district from here up to the river Mudigundi to be given to the best of Bráhmans.

Hence from to-day the boundary of Alúr village commencing from Pámulakálva up to the south-western corner as far as the (river) Mudigundi is also the boundary of the agrahára Chéjerla.

V. 58. I proceed next to describe in detail in order the well-known marks of the boundary in the western direction beginning from the south-western corner as far as the north-western corner.

V. 59. First there is the Bhútala gunta, then there is the limit of the Bóyachintala; and then there is the large well-known white "uppi" bush growing on a 'Nélaputta,' (a low ant-hill).

V. 60. Then the black 'uppi' bush growing on a Nélaputta. Next as you go on in the north-western corner is the mark Godungigattu.

V. 61. I next write down the well-known marks of the boundary in the northern direction, beginning from the north-western up to the north-eastern corner.

V. 62. In the north-west there is indeed the famous bush of black 'uppi' trees standing on a Nélaputta. Beyond that there is Godungigattu, next Golamillagunta.

V. 63. Then there is a black 'tumma' tree on a Nélaputta; beyond that shines Pótugattu. Next in the north-east corner with that at its apex is the Peyyalavágu with the mark "Toranaputta" (?)

V. 64. Then king Panta Malla (i.e., Mailára) having established the Bráhmans, who were the best of those that knew Brahma, having obtained the fruition of his birth, and being pleased with himself.

V. 65. With folded hands entreats future kings. "This charity of mine should be maintained by you."

It has thus been said by Rámachandra.

[First imprecatory verse.]

For the exaltation of the virtue of protection (of a grant) and for the condemnation of the sin of resumption a few old verses are here written :—

[Imprecatory verses.]

V. 72. He who seizes one cow, one ornament, or even one inch of land goes to hell (and stays there) until the final dissolution of the elements.

V. 73. Lands and wealth given to the gods and Brahmans should be protected by kings who desire happiness in both the worlds.

May there be prosperity !

Copper-plate No. 19.

[Malliyapúndi grant of Amma Rája II, East Chálukyan king (about 867 Śaka—945–46 A.D.]

Note.

The original of the subjoined inscription was discovered by Mr. Venugopal Chetti in the Rámalingéṣvara svámi temple of Madanúr, a village about 10 miles from Ongole, Nellore district. It records a grant of the village named Malliyapúndi, over twenty miles off. As to when it came into the possession of the temple authorities, no information is available. Through the kindness of the Rája of Venkatagiri Mr. Venugopal Chetti was enabled to get a loan of the copper-plate and prepare the transcript and translation.

The document is engraved on five copper-plates with raised rims, each measuring 9 inches long. There is writing only on the inner sides of the first and fifth plates while the other plates bear writing on both sides. The plates are joined by nearly a circular ring whose thickness is 2 inches and diameter $4\frac{1}{2}$ inches. To the ring is attached a beautiful circular seal which measures $2\frac{1}{2}$ inches in diameter and bears the usual Chálukyan symbols—a recumbent boar, the moon, and an elephant-goad; across the centre is written the legend "श्रीत्रिभुवनांकुश" (Śrí Tribhuvanánkuśa) and at the bottom is represented a lotus flower. The seal stands on an expanded lotus flower.

The plates and the seal are on the whole in excellent preservation. The characters are neatly engraved and there are no peculiarities in the orthography which is of the east Chálukyan style. The errors found in the inscription are noted in the foot-notes to the translation. One however is worth mentioning here; in line 47; after काधिपतिः, वृंत्त (vrintta) is written by mistake for वृत्तं, (vrittam), the anusvára being placed before त्त instead of after it.

The inscription opens with an invocation to the Jain religion, because the gift therein made is to a Jain temple. The grant of Amma II published in Volume VII, E.I., page 185, was also to a Jain temple.

Then there is the usual genealogy beginning with Kubja Vishnuvardhana, but very little new information of historical value is supplied. In the foot-notes any special points are referred to. In line 14 Vijayáditya III is called Parachakraráma, a surname not to be found in other inscriptions. As in some other Chálukyan inscriptions, here also the reign of Yuddhamalla, the son of Tála, is not mentioned, possibly because, as

Dr. Hultzsch suggests, he was considered a usurper. His name is however mentioned amongst the rival claimants who fought for the Veṅgi kingdom after the death of Vikramáditya. The other claimants are given as Rája Mártánḍa and Kanṭhiká Vijayáditya—names not traceable in other inscriptions. The fortunes of these are given in detail—Rája Mártánḍa was slain, and the other two were banished by Chálukya Bhíma II. Regarding Chálukya Bhíma II our grant gives a poetical account of his valour and greatness.

The donor was Amma Rája II and the inscription states that he was crowned in his twelfth year, in the Śaka year 867, i.e., 945–46 A.D. This date is given in another inscription of the same king, I.A., Volume VII, page 16. It is noteworthy that these two inscriptions contain a few almost identical sentences and verses.

The grant proper begins with the statement that Ammarája sends an order to the residents of the 'Vishaya' or district of Kommanánḍu. It then proceeds to mention the donee—a Jain temple called Kaṭakábharaṇa or ornament of Kaṭaka, constructed by Duggarája, to the south of the village of Dharmapuram which O. 39 and O. 40 seem to identify with Dharmavaram in Ongole taluk. Duggarája was Kaṭakarája (superintendent of the royal camp). His genealogy is briefly given as—

Katakádhipati (name not given).
Vijayáditya.
Duggarája, founder of the Jain temple in question.

It is said that this temple was presided over by a Jain saint named Diradéva, disciple of Divákara, a saint who was the first disciple of Jinanandi who was of the Śrí Yápuníya Sangha and of the Nandigachcha.

The grant consisted of the gift of Malliyapúndi village. Its western boundary is Kalvakúri, and its northern is Dharmapuram. So its exact situation is identifiable though there is now no village named Malliyapúndi.

The inscription states that the gift was made on the occasion of Uttaráyaṇa or the winter solstice. Its date is not given, but it must be after 867 Śaka, the year of the grantor's coronation.

The purpose of the grant was for the repairs of the abovesaid Jain temple and for the performance of worship, etc., therein.

The 'vijñapti' or executor of the grant is mentioned as Kaṭakarája, the superintendent of the royal camp or fort (probably Kocherlakóṭa, vide O. 46). That the term Kaṭaka denotes a fixed local area seems clear from the fact that the temple is called "the ornament of the Kaṭaka" and from O. 46 where a village is described as attached to Kocherlakóṭa Kaṭaka. "Fort" seems to be a better rendering than "royal camp" which suggests a mere temporary encampment.

Translation.

Lines 1 to 3. May there be always prosperity to the religion of the illustrious lord Jinéndra, which has vigorously spread (in the world), which is praised in the three worlds and which is the support of the magnificent Dharma, by whose power vices caused by the wicked Kali age and those springing from delusion and evil propensities on earth do not spread and (by whose power) there is always peace of (in) the earth.

Lines 3 to 8. Hail! Kubja Vishnuvardhana, the brother of Satyásráya Vallabhéndra, who adorned the race of the illustrious Chálukyas, who are of the gótra of the Mánavyas, who are praised throughout the whole universe, who are the descendants of Háriti, who have obtained sovereignty by the excellent grace of Kauṣiki,[1] who are protected by the assemblage of the divine mothers, who contemplate the feet of the lord Mahásénа,[2] who have subjugated the territories of their enemies in an instant at the mere sight of the excellent sign of the Boar which they had acquired through the grace of the Lord Náráyaṇa, (and) whose bodies have been purified by baths performed after celebrating horse sacrifices, reigned over the territory of Vengi for eighteen years.

Lines 8 and 9. His son Jayasimha (reigned) for thirty-three (years).

Line 9. Vishnuvardhana, the son of his younger brother Indrarája, (ruled) for nine (years).

Lines 9 and 10. His son Mangi Yuvarája (prince regent) (ruled) for twenty-five (years).

Line 10. His son Jayasimha (ruled) for thirteen (years). His younger brother Kokkili (ruled) for six months.

Lines 10 and 11. His elder brother Vishnuvardhana, having expelled him, (reigned) for thirty-seven years. His son Vijayáditya Bhaṭṭáraka (reigned) for eighteen (years).

Lines 11 and 12. His son Vishnuvardhana (ruled) for thirty-six (years).

Lines 12 and 13. (His son) the wise king Vijayáditya, who was as valiant as a lion and was surnamed Naréndramṛigarája (a lion among kings) reigned for forty-eight years.

---

[1] Kauṣiki—Párvatí, wife of Śiva. [2] Mahásénа—Skanda, son of Śiva.

Line 13. His son Káli Vishnuvardhana (ruled) for a year and half.

Lines 14 to 16. His son Vijayáditya, whose other name was Parachakraráma,[1] having in a great battle heavily defeated Mangi, the king of the Nodamba[2] Ráshtra (kingdom) who had taken refuge in the hills of Gangakúta,[3] and having fought with Sankila,[4] the king of Saṭṭala,[4] who was joined by the fierce Vallabha,[5] protected the earth for forty-four years.

[1] Vijayáditya III according to other inscriptions was called Gunaga, Gunagánka or Gunakenalla. According to the present inscription his surname was Parachakra Ráma, i.e., one who was like Ráma (Parasuráma) to other kings, i.e., the terror of other kings.

[2] Nodamba or Nolamba. The Nolambavádi which included Bellary and part of Mysore was ruled at one time by a branch the Pallava dynasty.

[3] Gangakúṭa is perhaps the Chakrakúṭa of other inscriptions.

[4] Saṭṭalas—probably a mistake for Raṭṭula, i.e., the Ráshṭrakúṭas.

In the original we have योयायायित्वा which makes no sense. It may be a mistake for योधायित्वा = having fought.

In other inscriptions these deeds are referred to, e.g. :—

Vol. VII, E.I., p. 189, Gunaga (Vijayáditya III) is described as 'one to whose arms great honour was paid by the Vallabha king' (Vallabhanripa samabhyarchitabhujah).

Vol. IV, p. 239, we have "the great lord Gunaga Vijayáditya . . . the hero who played the game of ball on the battle field with the head of Mangirája, who burnt Chakrakúṭa, who frightened Sankila, residing in Kíranapura (and) joined by Krishna, who restored his dignity to Vallabhéndra . . . ".

Ind. Antiquary XII, p. 221, Vijayáditya III "prompted by the lord of the Raṭṭas, having conquered the unequalled Gangas, cut off the head of Mangi in battle, and, having frightened Krishna and Sankila, he completely burnt their city."

In South Ind. Ins., Vol. I, pp. 38, 39 and 42, Vijayáditya "was renowned through killing Mangi and burning Kíranapura."

Our inscription states that Mangi was a Nodamba king and that Sankilá was a Raṭṭa king.

[5] The Vallabha here referred to must be the Krishna who is elsewhere said to have been in alliance with Sankila. It seems clear then that the identification of this Krishna with a Ráshtrakúṭa king is correct. But see E.I., Vol. IV, p. 227.

Lines 16 to 18. Then Chálukya Bhíma, the son of his younger brother Vikramáditya who was appointed Yuvarája,[1] (ruled) for thirty years. His elder brother (son) Vijayáditya[2] (ruled) for six months. His eldest son Ammarája (ruled) for seven years.

Lines 18 and 19. Then king Tála, the son of Yuddhamalla the paternal uncle of Chálukya Bhíma, having overcome his (Ammarája's) infant son[3] (ruled) for a month.

Lines 19 to 22. Then the illustrious Vikramáditya, the son of king Chálukya Bhíma, of very great prowess, having an army of fierce elephants, having slain in a fierce battle that king Tála along with the assemblage of the various feudatories who had large forces, wisely ruled the sea-girt earth for a year.

Lines 22 to 24. Then after the death of Vikramáditya, like Rákshasas (after the setting of the sun), the claimant princes, emulating one another, intent on harassing the subjects, desirous of getting sovereignty, Yuddhamalla, Rája Mártánḍa, Kanṭhiká Vijayáditya and others engaged in war.[4]

[1] Yuvarâja = Heir apparent.

[2] Vijayáditya IV is here said to be the elder brother of Chálukya Bhíma. This is a mistake, as in other inscriptions, he is given as his son; even in this inscription in line 23 he is correctly given as his son.

[3] Bála or infant son—whose name was Vijayáditya. He is said to have reigned half a month.

[4] According to other inscriptions Bhíma, another son of Ammarája, succeeded Vikramáditya and ruled for eight months; he was succeeded by Yuddhamalla, son of Tála. As in some other inscriptions, the reign of Yuddhamalla is not noted in our inscription apparently because he was considered a usurper. His name is however given as one of the claimants who fought for the kingdom; the others being Rája Mártánḍa and Kanṭhiká Vijayáditya. The last named seems to be Kanṭhiká Béṭa, the youthful son of Amma I, who was dethroned by Tála and founded a fresh line, for which see p. 4 of the E.R. for 1893–94. Our inscription tells us that Rája Mártánḍa was slain, while the other two were banished from the country by Chálukya Bhíma II.

On page 46, S.I. Inscriptions, Vol. 1, Dr. Hultzsch says in a note that Rája Mártánḍa was a surname of Chálukya Bhíma II. In the present inscription, Rája Mártánḍa was one of the rival dáyádis slain by Chálukya Bhíma II.

Lines 24 and 25. Thus five years passed in mere war. Then he succeeded, Lines 25 and 26. Who slew Rája Mártánḍa amongst them in a battle; and by whom Kanṭhiká Vijayáditya and Yuddhamalla were banished from the country.

Lines 26 to 28. By the edge of the scimitar wielded by his club-like arms, many other honourable kings also, who were spoiled by evil course of conduct, who were causes of trouble to the country, and who were famous, were brought to destruction.

Lines 28 and 29. The command of him who was waging fierce battle was worn on the head (honoured) like a garland by kings who were devoted to him.

Line 29. The fire of his anger does not turn back without having entirely consumed the assemblage of enemies.

Line 30. His pure fame does not keep quiet without pervading[1] the whole world.

Line 31. The store of his wealth which was like a heap of clouds verily rains on the good crop, viz.,[2] men who are being daily scorched by the excessive heat of poverty.

Line 32. He, Rájabhíma, the son of Vijayáditya, the grandson of Chálukya Bhíma, wisely ruled the earth for 12 years.

1 नभ्रमत् means 'not wandering.' The idea is that his fame was always in motion over the earth, i.e., ever increasing.

Both in this and in the following sentences न—न, two negatives are used to express an affirmative.

2 जनससस्ये—makes no sense. It is probably a mistake for जनसत्ससस्य. A poor man is compared to crops withered by heat and the king's wealth is compared to clouds which rain on them.

Lines 32 and 34. To him whose form was like that of Mahéṣvara, from Lókamahádévi whose beauty was like that of Umá, was born Ammarája who was like Kumára.

Lines 34 and 35. The soles of his feet were marked with the signs:—lotus flower, umbrella, chowri, the water-pot and the elephant-goad; he had shining arms as massive as bars of iron and hanging as far as the knee.

Lines 35 to 38. His shoulders were like the summits of the Himálayas; he was learned in the science of kings, and skilled in the use of various weapons. He vanquished the assemblage of his enemies. He was versed in the treatises on elephants and horses. He was a very bee at the lotus feet of Hara (Siva). He was illustrious, a very tree of paradise to poets and singers, a very cow of plenty to Bráhmans, hermits, the poor, the blind and relations, a very philosopher's stone to the assemblage of beggars, the gem of kings of the earth. He was like the sun by reason of his excessive brilliance.

Lines 38 to 41. In the Śaka year reckoned by the mountains (seven), the flavours (six) and the Vasus (eight), i.e., (S.S. 867) in this month of Márgaṣírsha on the thirteenth day of the dark fortnight, on Friday, under the constellation Maitra, under the zodiacal sign of Dhanus (bow), when the sun was in 'ghaṭa' (water-jar), and in the 12th year of his age, he assumed the crown to the delight of the world, like the mountain of dawn bearing the sun.[1]

Lines 41 and 42. He, Śrí Vijayáditya Ammarája, the asylum of the whole universe, the great king, the supreme lord of kings, very righteous, thus commands all the householders of the district of Kammanándu headed by the headmen.

---

[1] In the inscription in S.A., Vol. VII, p. , Dr. Fleet reads रावारव= like the sun on the mountain of dawn; the simile is not quite intelligible there.

Lines 43 and 44. Nobles[1] (Áryáh).

He, the hero of Pándaranga, consumed Kíranapuram, the residence of Krishnarája, as Śiva burned Tripuram; therefore the enumeration of the valiant exploits of him whose fame is pure, is impossible even to one with a thousand mouths.[2]

Line 45. His son had his forehead adorned with the pure and white insignia of royalty of Kataka.

Lines 45 and 46. His son Vijayâditya was the ruler of Kataka.[3]

Verses 46 to 48.[4] His son Duggarája was the receptacle of virtuous qualities, pious, truthful, charitable, enjoyer of luxuries, great-souled, conqueror in battles, the abode of the goddess of victory.

Even his sword was ever for the protection of the fortune of the Chálukyas; and his family[5] was famous for the support of the excellent and great kingdom of Vengi.

[1] The visarga is omitted after आर्या.

[2] The reading and translation of lines 43 and 44 are conjectural as the original here is apparently full of mistakes. कृष्णराजास्ततयः makes no sense. It is proposed to read कृष्णराजास्थितं य : he who burned Kíranapuram where Krishnarája dwelt, for Sankila dwelt at Kíranapuram and Krishna his ally may have dwelt there too. मुखसहस्र — the allusion is probably to Śésha who is fabled to have 1,000 mouths.

[3] Dr. Fleet in Vol. VII, E.I., pp. 183 to 185, discusses the meaning of the word Katakarája and concludes that it denotes an official post, that of the Governor or superintendent of the royal camp (Kataka).

[4] Ajñapti or Vijñapti = a command. In inscriptions it denotes the dùtaka or messenger whose duty it was to communicate the grant to the local authorities (Vol. VII, E.I., p. 183).

वृत्त in the original is evidently a mistake for वृत्तं = verse, the anusvára being placed before त्त by mistake instead of after it. It denotes that what follows is verse.

[5] वशः = (1) a bamboo, (2) family. There is here a pun on the word and therefore अवलंबाय (= for support) is used, a bamboo being used for that purpose.

Lines 48 and 49. An excellent temple of Jina, which was very charming, was constructed by him, to the south of Dharmapuri, and there is a holy temple auspiciously named the "ornament of Kaṭaka."[1]

Lines 50 and 51. There was the lord of saints Jinanandi, who was the chief of the holy Kótimaduva gaṇa of the Śrí Yápuniya Sangha, belonging to the holy and venerable Nandi gachcha, and who was equal to a Ganadhara[2].

Lines 51 and 52. His first disciple was Divákara, famous in the earth, the best of sages, who was the repository of supreme knowledge, great-souled, who was himself like the Jinas in the aggregate of virtues.

Lines 52 and 53. His disciple was the illustrious sage Díradéva, the store-house of austerities, wise, whom the world esteems as endowed with the greatness of power to command.[3]

Lines 53 to 56. The executant of this charity is Kaṭakarája. On the occasion of a winter solstice, after

---

[1] Kaṭakábharana, "the ornament of Kaṭaka," is the name of the temple.

[2] The text of lines 51 and 52 is obscure and the reading is only provisional.

The Yápaniya Sangha was a sect of the Jains whose members "had the appearance of Digambaras, but the observances of Śvétambarás (Vol. IV, E.I., p. 339).

Nandigachcha' was one of the four gachchas or schools of Digambara Jain ascetics. The four gachchas were—

(1) Nandigachcha, (2) Sarasvati gachcha, (3) Bhárati gachcha and (4) Syéna gachcha; Jinanandi was of the Nandigachcha.

Sangha = Fraternity—the clergy of the Buddhists as well as of the Jains.

A gana dhara was the teacher of a gaṇa or sect.

[3] Pratihárya Śakti—probably a technical expression of Jainism. It is interpreted as Prabhu sakti—the power of lordship or power to rule men.

Lines 54 and 55. The portion of the inscription giving the purposes for which the gift was made is apparently wrongly engraved. Satra means 'charity'.

There is a village named Kalvakur even now in Addanki division of Ongole taluk.

Dharmapuram also is a village in the same neighbourhood.

making a libation of water, the hamlet named Malliyapúndi is given exempt from all taxes to the temple of Jina named Kaṭakábharaṇa which is presided over by him, for the restoration of whatever may have been broken or torn, and for the performance of offering, worship and satrá (giving food).

Lines 56 and 57. Its village boundaries are—

On the east—Manjunúru;
On the south—Yinimili;
On the west—Kalvakúru; and
On the north—Dharmapuram.

Lines 57 to 60. The field boundaries of this village are—

On the east—Gollavi guṇṭa;
On the south-east—Ráviaperiacheruvu;
On the south—the demarcation stone;
On the south-west—the demarcation stone;
On the west—Malkaparṛakoṛabóyutaṭáka;
On the north-west—the demarcation stone;
On the north—Dúva cheruvu;
On the north-east—the boundary is the same as the boundary of the field named Ervókachénu of Kalvakúru.

Copper-plate No. 20.

[Bitragunta grant of Sangama II (S.S. 1278). (A.D. 1356–57 ?).]

Abstract.

This grant has been already published in the 3rd volume of E.I., pp. 21 to 35.

The plates are five, measuring 10 inches × $5\frac{1}{4}$ inches. The ring connecting them is lost. The writing is in Telugu and the language is Sanskrit verse.

The inscription opens with an invocation to the Boar incarnation of Vishnu and then introduces the first Vijayanagar king Sangama. Verses 3 and 4 say that he had five sons—Harihara, Kampa, Bukka, Márapa and Muddapa. The first two ruled one after the other. The donor was Kampa's son Sangama II, whose name is not given in any other inscription.

The date of the grant was the new moon day of the third month of Durmukhi in S.S. 1278.

The object of the grant was the village of Biṭragunṭa. It was given to 28 Brahmans at the request of the king's preceptor Ṣríkanṭhanátha. The village was hence surnamed Ṣríkanṭhapuram. The occasion is said to be the anniversary of the king's father's death. From this it is to be gathered that Sangama II ascended the throne in S.S. 1277 (see E.I. III, p. 23).

The inscription also records the grant of another village Sunkésari.

It is recorded that the writer was Bhóganátha, the Court jester of Sangama II.

[Kuchipúḍi grant of Achyutadéva. Telugu (S.S. 1270). (A.D. 1347–48.)]

TRANSLATION.

Hail! On the 15th of the bright-half of Kártika of the year Sarvajit, corresponding to 1270 of the illustrious, victorious and prosperous Śálivâhana Śaka era, (Achyutadéva Mahárája), who belongs to a ṣákhá, a sútra, and a gótra, who is a swan taking refuge in the lotus feet of God himself, who is the grandson of Anantadéva Mahárâya, who is the son of Nrisimhadéva Mahárâya, who has the birudas—Ṣrímad Rájádhirája, Rájaparaméṣvara, Múruráyaraganḍa, Ashtadigráyamanóbhayankara, Bhasadappupararáyaraganḍa, Púrvapaśchimádéśa, Karnáṭa Lakshmí Manóhara—the sovereign who is enthroned at Vijayanagar (gave this edict)—"Ándrapaṭnam was established by Brahma, Parvatam by Vishnu, the bilam (cave) by Śiva, Ganga by Ánjanéya. There is no rebirth to one who has been to the temple of Rámalinga which was consecrated by Ráma."

These are the terms of the charitable edict relating to the gift of land executed and granted by Achyutadéva Mahárâya, after making obeisance with prostrations to Ṣrí Ándra Rámalinga Svámi, who is the supreme lord of the whole world and who resides in Podili ṣíma. A field of 10 kuchchalas in the village named Kuchipúḍi, a wet field which can be sown with 10 túms (of seed) under the Marripúḍi tank, half a kuchchala of land in every village situated in this ṣíma, méras of 2 measures on every puṭṭi of produce, and a fee of Rs. 2 on every Rs. 100 (of revenue). We have settled these terms and granted the above to you on the holy occasion of Parva. Therefore the income derived from these should be utilized for offerings and worship with lights, for the great festivals during Navarátri, the month of Kártika, the month of Dhanus, and Śivarátri, for the worshippers and for the offering of 1,000 Bilva leaves on Mondays. On Sunday eight Brahman travellers going on the old road should be fed with food and water. In this manner may you be pleased to maintain the charity always and protect us. May Ándralingéśvarasvámi deign to accept the eight species of ownership of this charity.

V. I bear on my head the two feet of Rudra which Hari in the form of a boar, having dug the earth, did not see (i.e., though he dug as far as the nether regions he could not find Rudra's feet).

The signature of Achyutadéva Mahárája.

NOTE.—There are good reasons to doubt the genuineness of this grant which was obtained through M.R.Ry. C. Ráma Rao, Deputy Tahsildar of Podili division, from the Archaka of the Rámalingéśvara temple at Kúchipúḍi. The writer was evidently ignorant of the śákha, sútra and gótra to which Achyutadéva belonged; his grandfather's name differs from that commonly accepted and the value of the grant is suspiciously large. The date is, of course, wrong and, as the Śaka and cycle years correspond, the error, which amounts to about 200 years, is not likely to be due to a mere slip.

[Talamanchi grant of the Western Chálukyan king Vikramáditya I.]

Note.

These plates are three in number and were found by a resident of Tallamanchi and given to the Collector of Nellore. They measure $7\frac{1}{2}$ inches $\times$ $3\frac{1}{4}$ inches and are connected by a ring, the seal on which is much erased and bears the figure of a boar. The first and third plates are engraved only on one side. The grant was by the Western Chálukyan king Vikramáditya I. The characters are of the usual western Chálukyan style. The only noteworthy point is the use of the symbol ∞ for final m. Except in one portion the writing is well preserved. A photograph is annexed.

[1] The text is possibly as follows :—

37. हरिः वाराहरूपेण । भित्तवा तलमद्द
38. ष्टवान् । यौ रुद्रपादौ(तौ) भक्तया । शिरसा धारयाम्य
39. हं ॥

Compare with this inscription those in Volume VI, I. Antiquary, p. 75; Volume VII, I. Antiquary, p. 219. The name of the dynasty Chálukya is given with the vowel of the first syllable short.

The object of the grant is the village of Edusanti situated to the north of Kororukonṭa. The donee is the king's spiritual preceptor Mégháchárya of the Vasisbṭa gótra. The date is the sixth year of the reign of the king. Dr. Fleet places Vikramáditya I about 580 S.S. (Vol. VII, I.A., 218.)

The inscription was engraved by Śrí Vajravarma of the Vaidya family. It closes with a benediction on Brahmans and cows.

Translation.

Verse. Victorious is the Boar form, which was manifested of Vishnu, which made the ocean tempestuous (and) which had the earth resting on the tip of its lofty right tusk.

The great grandson of Śrí Pólikési (Pulikési) Vallabha Mahárája, who adorned the race of the Chálukyas who are illustrious, who are of the lineage of Mánavya which is praised throughout the whole universe, who are the descendants of Háriti, who have been fostered by the seven mothers who are the seven mothers of the world, who have uninterruptedly obtained prosperity through the protection of Kártikèya, and who have subjugated all kings in an instant at the sight of the sign of the Boar which they had acquired through the grace of the Lord Náráyaṇa and whose body was purified by baths taken after performing horse-sacrifices,

The grandson of Śrí Kírtivarma Prithivi Vallabha Mahárája, whose pure fame was established in the territories of the hostile kings of Vanavási and other countries which had been invaded byhis valour;

the beloved son of Satyáśráya Śrí Prithiví Vallabha Mahárájádhirája Rájaparaméśvara, who acquired the title of Paramésvara (supreme lord) by defeating Śrí Harshavarddhana [1] the warlike supreme lord of the whole region of the north;

the unrepulsed Vikramáditya, Vikramáditya Satyáśráya Śrí Prithivi Vallabha Mahárájádhirájaparaméśvara, whose enemies were vanquished by (the valour of) his own arm which resembles (in vastness) the body of the serpent by which the burden of the earth is borne (i.e., Ádiśésha), who has many wounds concealed by his armour, having regained the fortune of his father which was eclipsed by the triad of kings,[2] with the sole help of the excellent horse named Chitrakantha and of the pure, sharp and brilliant sword which exults in tasting the blood of hostile kings in many famous battles, bearing singly the burden of the whole kingdom which was firmly established, and having reinstated in that triad of kingdoms by word of mouth (verbal command) the property of gods and grants to Brahmans which had lapsed, for the increase of religious merit and fame, having vanquished in battle hostile kings in all quarters, and having obtained the fortune of his own family and (having attained) the status of Paraméśvara (supreme lordship), commands all.

"Be it known to you! In the 6th year of our prosperous and victorious reign, in the month of Śrávaṇa, at solar eclipse, the village Edusanti, situated to the northern side of the village named Korurokonṭa, has been given by us with libation of water, free from all taxes, to our guru Srí Mégháchárya, who is learned in the Védas with their Angas and Upángas, who is of the gótra of Vasishṭa, for the acquisition of religious merit and fame by our parents and ourselves, to last as long as the sun, moon, earth and ocean exist. It should be protected by those who wish to acquire fame just like their own gift.

V. It is very easy to give one's own property; but the protection of the grant of another is difficult.

V. (If it is asked which is more meritorious) giving (oneself) or preserving (another's grant), preservation is better than giving.

And it has been said by the blessed Vyása, who compiled the Védas.

V. Land has been enjoyed by many kings beginning with Sagara ; he, who for the time being possesses land enjoys the benefit of it.

V. Whoever appropriates land given by himself or another is reborn a worm in ordure for 60,000 years.

This edict of the family of Ṣrí Mégháchrya has been written by Śrí Vajra Varma of the Vaidya family (caste).

May there be prosperity to cows and Brahmans !

Ṣrí !

NOTE.—This inscription was discovered about 12 years ago by a servant of Adapalli Venkaṭa Reḍḍi of Párlapaili while ploughing some land known as Talamanchipádu in Talamanchi of Nellore taluk where a flourishing village is said to have once stood. The plates were got for us by the Deputy Tahsildar M.R.Ry. A. Ananta Náráyana Śástri and have been sent to the Madras Museum at the request of the owner.

TRANSLATION.

Hail! On Friday, the 11th day of the bright fortnight of Bhádrapada of the year Parábhava, corresponding to the year 1168 of the illustrious Ṣaka era, Hail! Ṣríman Mahámaṇḍaléṣvara Allu Tirukáḷatidéva Mahárája, who is endowed with the honour consisting of all names and titles, while ruling at the city of Kánchi, holding pleasant communication (with his feudatories), consecrated Dánava Murári Perumándi Déva at Ṣrí Átukúru (Átmakur) for the religious merit of his father-in-law Tirukáḷadéva Mahárája and for the increase of his own life, health and wealth and caused to be built a temple and maṇḍapas to that deity. He made a gift for (providing) enjoyments in perpetuity to last as long as the sun and moon exist. May there be great prosperity!

He made a gift of (lease of) 4 paṭṭus of paddy field out of Prabhu mányam[1] (Government land) measured by the 20-span (pole) of this village; 20 paṭṭus of dry Government land measured by the (pole of) 26 of the same spans of this village . . . . (the rate is) a máḍa for 2 paṭṭus of kóru land; on dry land it is a máḍa per paṭṭu; a máḍa per 4 paṭṭus in excess (?) of kóru dry land. This is the rate for kóru land for all expenses for them.

[1] This phrase perhaps means land granted by the State for the private use of a subordinate ruler.

Rámireḍḍi should pay in the month of Vaiṣákha of every year 130 máḍas on the gross income towards all the expenses of the deity irrespective of the vicissitudes of the season, acts of the king, acts of God, excess of rain and drought. This lease should continue as long as the moon and the sun endure.

Translation.

(1) Continued severe illness which wears out a patient.

(2) Death as compared with such illness is contemptible.

(3) Indeed, O Ayesha,[1] such illness embitters life.

TRANSLATION.

Hail ! On Friday, the 30th of the dark fortnight of Jyéṣṭha of the year Íṣvara, corresponding to the year 1609 of the illustrious and prosperous Ṣálivâhana Ṣaka era, on the holy occasion of a solar eclipse the following charitable edict was given with libation of water by Ṣrímat (Dávu Suratrána ?) Máradattamgáru, who is all-powerful, to Chennakéṣavadéva (deity) of Chéjarla and to Náganátham Timmávójhulu, who is of the yajus sákhá and of the Kaundinya gótra. They should enjoy the village . . . . which is attached to Udayagiri rájya and subject to us with its eight species of enjoyment and eight species of ownership. Half of the village is set apart for the deity for performing tírtha mahótsava to the deity. If any fail in this charity he will incur the sin of killing cows and Brahmans on the banks of the Ganges.

[Two imprecatory verses.]

The temple servant (sthánapati) of this deity is . . . . Chennakésava . . . .

NOTE.—The cyclic and S.S. year do not correspond. Members of the Kaundinya gótra appear as makers or recipients of grants in C.P. 3, C.P. 13, O. 102 and O. 111 as well as here. The donor is not identifiable.

TRANSLATION.

(Sanskrit verses.)

On Monday, the auspicious tithi, the 12th of the dark fortnight of Kártika in Parídhávi, in the illustrious Ṣáliváhana Ṣaka year reckoned by the oceans (4), three, the arrows (5), earth (1), i.e., (1534), the weir of the tank bund built with stone pillars was constructed to-day by the lord Rudra, the moon of the illustrious (family of) Chintapaṭla, in the town of Kullúru. This verse is composed by Náganárya, the moon of the family of the illustrious Jallipalli to the perpetual delight of all learned men.

(Telugu prose.)

Prosperity! Hail! On Monday, the 12th of the dark fortnight of Kártíka of the year Paridhávi, corresponding to the year 1534 of the illustrious, victorious and prosperous Ṣáliváhana Ṣaka era, while Ṣrímad Rájádhirája Rájaparamés̱vara Ṣrí Víra Pratápa Ṣrí Víra Venkaṭapatiráya was ruling the kingdom of the earth, Venkaṭapati Náyaningáru, who is the moon of the ocean of the race of Padmanáyaka, who is the conqueror of the territory called Panchapándya, who is an Arjuna in war, who is the paramour of the prostitutes who are the princes bearing all birudas, who is pure by reason of descent from the góira of Récherla, who is the grandson of Velugóṭi Peda Konḍama Náyuḍu and who is the son of Komára Timmanáyuḍu, sent for Rudrappa, who is the ruler of the ṣíma of Kullúru, who is skilled in ruling that kingdom, who is holy by reason of his descent from the gótra of Paisála, and who is the grandson of Chintapaṭla Singama Náyuḍu and the son of Chenchama Náyuḍu, at Kullúr which was granted to him (Venkaṭapati Náyaningáru) for ruling as an amaram by Venkaṭapatiráya and addressed him thus "You have restored the sluice of Anantaṣágaram tank which was in disrepair; you have constructed the eastern weir of Kaluváyi tank and are keeping the tank in good order. Deeds of charity like topes, topes in tanks, wells, etc., are meritorious services. So construct the eastern weir of Kullúr tank for the religious merit of my father Komára Timmanáyuḍu." Thus the assembly commanded him. Therefore Rudrappa Náyuḍu fixed 33 stone posts on the tank weir, built side walls on the two sides and constructed a flight of steps in stone so as to last in perpetuity as long as the sun and moon endure, Ṣrí!

(Telugu verse.)

Chenchaya Rudra Sauri, who is the resident of Chintapaṭla, who is the abode of Ṣrí, and who is delightful by reason of his charming qualities, planted 33 stone pillars on the weir of the Nallacheruvu of Kullúr, pillars which resemble the beautiful jewelled chariots of Indra who has come to bathe here, which are, as it were, high peaks to those who come with the desire of seeing the bund of the tank, which are, as it were, emblems of the good fame acquired by the lord of the earth, who is famous in polity—which, kissing the sky, resemble the pinnacles of Varuṇarája, and which are set with pearls.

NOTE.—From R. 60 we learn that Kanchamma was the mother of this ruler of Kullúru ṣíma and that he built a sluice for Tegacherla tank.

On Thursday, the 15th of the bright fortnight of Márgaṣira of the illustrious year Vyaya, Madhura Perumáḷḷa Ráju, son of Kulaṣékhara Manḍana Perumáḷḷa Ráju, the emperor of the three worlds, and Káḷati Ráju, son of Kulaṣékhara Kávéri, issued this charitable edict as a gift to the gods Múlasthána Íṣayadéva and Nágéṣvaradéva of Mahimalúru. We have given with libation of water on the holy occasion of a lunar eclipse on Thursday, the 15th of the bright fortnight of Márgaṣira of that year 100 kuntas of land under the Rámamaḍi Pina Cheruvu in Mahimalúru which is situated in Giribhávivelibóyaviḷa which is attached to our chiefdom. This should be utilized for offerings to the deities in perpetuity to last as long as the moon endure. Whoever cause obstruction to this charity will incur the sin of killing a tawny cow near the Ganges.

Hrim Ṣrí!

NOTE.—We have not been able to identify this emperor. The name and the reference to Madura suggest a Pánḍyan. Mr. Sewell on pages 70 and 72 of Vol. 2 of "Antiquities" mentions two inscriptions of Kulaṣékhara Perumál from Tinnevelly. They are of the 16th century and can hardly have any connection with the emperor of this inscription.

Hail! Śríman Mahámanḍalésvara Tṛipurári Déva Mahárája, who is the director of 72 offices, who is the worshipper of the lotus feet of Rudradéva Mahárája the ornament of the Kákatiya family, who (Rudradéva) is the ruler of many countries, who is the supporter of the four castes, who is the disperser of the army of the western king Dámódara, who is the only hero, who is the incarnation of valour, who is a perfect Révanta amongst those who are mounted on very unruly horses, who is Náráyaṇa and who is the beloved consort of the goddess of victory, who is terrible in battle, before whom the courage of all kings is paralyzed, with the collection of whose fame the foreheads of the maidens of the cardinal points are marked, who surpasses in liberality Káma Dhénu (cow of plenty) and Kalpa Druma (tree of plenty), the collection of rays from the nails of whose feet is kissed by the edges of the jewelled crowns of all kings who bowed to him, who (Tripurári) has acquired the lordship of the whole kingdom, who is of great prowess, who has the titles Chalamattuganḍa, Múruráya-jagadaḷa, Maṇḍalíka Bramha Rákshasa, Gaṇḍa Peṇḍáru, Hail! on the holy occasion of a lunar eclipse, on Wednesday, the 15th of the bright fortnight of Śrávaṇa of the year Ángirasa, corresponding to the year 1194 of the Śrí Śaka era, he gave for providing enjoyments to Śrí Tripurántakadéva, the village of Aluvalapáḍu in Póliganḍa Sthala with its four boundaries and with its income, after pouring water into the hand of Śrímat Triyambaka Śiváchárya, the worshipper of the illustrious lotus feet of Śrí Tripurántaka Déva, for the increase of his life, health and wealth, in perpetuity to last as long as the sun and moon endure.

[Three imprecatory verses.]

Whoever thinks otherwise of this charity will incur the sin of killing ten thousand black cows on the banks of the Ganges.

(May it cause) great prosperity !

NOTE.—

Révanta—son of the sun.

Diṣápatta—Canarese = scatterer to all the points of the compass. Dámódara was apparently a Kaḍamba king, vide p. 93, Vol. XXI, I.A.

"Chalamattiganḍa" or Chalamartiganḍa was a biruda of the Kákatiyas.

Mururáya Jagadala, probably means the conqueror of the three kings.

Maṇḍalīka Brahma Rákshasa a very Brahma Rákshasa to provincial chiefs.

Gaṇḍa Peṇḍáru—Canarese; the meaning is not clear.

[1] Parama Bhaṭṭáraka = very religious.

(lord of snakes); his emblems are the elephant, crocodile, serpent and boar; he wears the discus like Narasimha and Ráma; his territory is girt by the girdle of the four oceans, his throne is invulnerable, he wears a jewelled diadem and a lalátapaṭṭa (ornament for the forehead), his excellent body has been rendered holy by bathing in the Ganges which is 1,000 yójanas away; he is a born Karṇa (i.e., liberal); he has a triad of umbrellas with white handles; his emblem is the moon adorned with the serpent, he is of the Vishnu family, he is the ornament of the lunar race, he is of the Hárita gótra, he is the protector of unborn children; he is a tree of paradise to dependants, a protector of refugees; he has planted pillars of victory in the mountains to the east and west of the Mahánadi river; he is the ornament of the Vishnu family; the lord of the three worlds, he is Góvinda, he is a moon, he is the punisher of his enemies, he is a Bhíma who punishes the elephants who are his enemies, he is the hero among the men of the three worlds . . . ? he is the spoiler of the kingdoms of his foes . . ? he is Óm Náráyaṇa; he is a descendant of the race of Nága (serpent); he is the vanquisher of the three crowns (kings), he is Britti Manivvara Gaṇḍa,[1] he is the ocean of truth, an Arjuna in war, he is an emperor. . . . ? Gonkaráju had all these titles. His son was Manabali Dévaráju, his son was Nágaráju, his son was Pótaráju, his son was Vémula Mali Dévaráju, his son was Núnkaráju, his son was Ásna Dévaráju, his son was Núnkaráju, his son was Óbalayya. The agraháras granted by Ásna Dévaráju of Darasi for the religious merit of the aforesaid:—We have granted Pina Pántaḍa to Gurudévara. We have granted Peda Pántaḍa to the mahájanas (elders) in the presence of Cherumanagoṇḍa Payyaráju, Náraparáju and Mantriráju, for the merit of our grandfather. We have granted an agrahára to the mahájanas in the presence of Siddhavarupu Kalapa Maláya Singaráju and Jakkapeddi Gangu Mantriráju, at the junction of Darsi and Chandalúru for the religious merit of our excellent son Núnkaráju and in his name we have built in the régaḍa (black cotton soil) fields of Darsi the tank called Pápirávigunṭa and have granted 100 kunṭas as agrahára to Guru Dévara for his religious merit. We have granted to the mahájanas of Chirumana Gonḍa, a fertile field yielding sáma crop at the junction of Tangéḍa Vancha and Chirumanagonḍa for the maintenance of the village. We have given Pandaráju agrahára and a dry field in Edara village between Edara and Púrimiṭṭa in the name of Maluḍu Vémula Mali Dévaráju, grandson of Manva Malidévaráju; also Goranṭla field which is 4 gorrus in extent under the Edara tank at the junction with Púrimiṭṭa.

Third side.

Having sold the land which is our vritti, we have given the front portion of the garden to Chilukúri Anamaráju Mantaráju and Dáyá Vírayya.

We have given an agrahára to Beli Núntu Alikharáju, and Mantriráju at the junction of Darsi and Dévarapu, in the name of Ásnadévaráju for our own religious merit.

We have caused to be constructed a temple to Pratápa Gópinátha of Darsi for the religious merit of our parents; we have caused to be constructed a tank in the name of our mother Lakshyama Dévi and have caused to be erected a pillar. We have given 20 puttis of land in Úrachénu to the north of Darsi to Bójuri Váju, the Vójulu (artizan) who constructed this temple.

[One imprecatory verse.]

Those who injure this charity will incur the sin of committing the five cardinal sins.

Those who maintain the charity according to the orders of Pratápa Gópinátha will acquire great merit (?).

NOTE.—This inscription is difficult to decipher and render. The translation is conjectural in parts. The S.S. and cyclic years differ widely. The mother of Ásnadéva is given in one place as Aryamadévi and in another as Lakshyamadévi; one or other is doubtless a mistake in transcription.

(Adoration be to) Śrí Ráma! Prosperity!

Hail! On Thursday the 1st of the dark fortnight of Jyéshṭha of the year Plava, corresponding to the illustrious, victorious and prosperous Śáliváhana Śaka year 1464, Venkaṭapati, of the Parakuṭla gótra, grandson of Śésam Rangappagáru, and son of Chennappagáru, performed an act of charity in constructing this well. The act of charity was performed for the religious merit of Gádi Lakshmínarasimha.

[One imprecatory verse].

(Adoration be to) Śrí Ráma! Śésam Venkaṭapati constructed a well in the village of Divvaram (Dévavaram) which belongs to Râja Śrí Gummaḍappa Rághavappa Náyaningáru and (thus) performed an act of charity. Therefore the details of the gifts made by the kápus are :—

we have granted garden land containing 2 gorrus at a rent of 6 (?)

Signature of Venkaṭádri Náyaningáru.

Signature of Gópála Venkaṭanarasu the karnam of the village.

Signatures of Chippiri Venkaṭapati and Ambatti Buchi Reḍḍi, the Peddakápu.

NOTE.—Gummadappa Rághavappa Náyaningáru does not appear elsewhere in this collection. He was probably an ordinary land owner.

Hail! On the 5th day of the dark fortnight of Kártika of the year Vyaya, corresponding to the year 1328 of the illustrious Śaka era, while the 56 countries were prosperous with good crops, while the village of Donakonḍa was flourishing, while the son of Dévaráya Mahárâyulu was ruling the kingdom, while Kapratidéva alias Cháma Voḍayalu was ruling the village, for the religious merit of Doṇakonḍa Tirumandulapu Tinuṭijika's sons and for himself, he constructed maṇḍapas, constructed a stone temple to Mánkalamma (goddess), constructed a temple to the vírlu (heroes) and caused to be raised a fortified enclosure. He did this to last as long as the sun and moon exist.

May it cause great prosperity!

Note.—The allusion is, no doubt, to Rámachandra son of Dévaráya I and governor of Udayagiri. His rule extended over Addanki Ráshtra (see C.P. 1) and Donakonḍa probably fell within the boundaries of that ráshtra.

The other persons named in this inscription are not referred to elsewhere in this collection and were doubtless of no importance.

Venkaṭápúri Rámayyagáru at Donakonḍa, the following inscription was inscribed on stone by Finnamma Naiḍu, the younger brother of Vemá Náyanimgáru.

Hail! On the 11th of the bright fortnight of Kártika of the year Paridhávi, corresponding to the year 1354 of the illustrious Śaka era, for the religious merit of Śríman Mahárájádhirája, Rájaparamésvara, Śrí Víra Pratápa Dévaráya Mahárayulu . . . . Dévamahá-ráju, son of Gummaḍúri Konḍuráju Chinni Ráju gave this charitable edict to Gangá Paramésvarí, goddess of all the sciences. We have presented to the dévâta (goddess), being in the presence of Vírúpáksha (who resides) on the banks of the Tungabhadra, the village . . . . which is attached to our chiefdom with libation of water and gift of gold for the performance of játara (festival) and for providing all enjoyments to the Ammangáru (Gangamma), to last as long as the sun and moon exist.

[Imprecatory verse.]

NOTE.—The Gummaḍúri family is alluded to as chiefs of an area which included Donakonḍa village in D. 23 under date 1427–28. The Kámayadéva of KV. 40 is probably different from the Kámayadéva of D. 23 and no other references to these chiefs seem to have been found.

Múruráyaraganda = the vanquisher of the three kings (Chéra, Chóḷa and Pándya). Ariráya vibhála = the destroyer of hostile kings. Púrva dakshina paschima samudrádhísvara the lord of the eastern, southern and western seas. Yavanarájyasthápanáchárya, establisher of the kingdom of the Yavanas (Muhammadans). Ashtadigráyamaébhayankara, the terror of the minds of kings of the eight cardinal points. Básaduppuvaráyaraganda, he who punishes kings who break their word.

Ashtadigráyamanóbhayankara, Básadappuvaráyaraganda, Púrva dakshina paschima samudrádhíṣvara, Yavanarájyasthápanáchárya, the conqueror of Aṣvapati and Gajapati, Ṣrí Vírapratápa Ṣrí Krishnaráya Mahárayulu, seated on the diamond throne at Vidyánagar, was ruling the earth.

Yeddu Mummayya Bagádingáru having seen (addressed?) the following leaders of the cowherd (Gópa) caste, chiefs of the Yedu (Yadu) caste and lions among Gollas which castes (?) are the door-keepers to Ṣrí Krishnaráya Déva Mahárya, to wit:—Timapanáyundu, Ádipanáyundu, Nasapanáyundu, Bhandármu Peddapanáyundu, Bórisú Bairinendu, ditto Nágatáta, Avasaram Basivinendu, Kírtilayyangáru, and people of various gótras in the royal abodes of the above and others, (thereupon) the people of the Yádava gótra rejoicingly besought Krishnaráya Mahárya to bestow upon Gangá Paramésvari the village of Dévara Donakonda which is the principal seat of the Nandagópa caste and the Badugula caste (?). (Accordingly) he caused a charitable edict to be issued granting the village of Donakonda in perpetuity as long as the sun and moon endure, with its four boundaries, together with ponds, wells, tanks, hidden treasures, deposits, etc., ... for providing means of enjoyment and sacred food to Gangá Paramésvari.

[V. 1. An ordinary inprecatory verse.]

V. 2. Even a charity founded by an enemy should be assiduously protected; the enemy indeed is an enemy, but (the) charity (performed by him) is not anyone's enemy.

* * * *

May it cause great prosperity to Yeddu Mummayya Bagádingáru!

NOTE.—We find the Baḍugula people mentioned again in K.R. 26 where it is said under their chief Kátam Rázu they were defeated by Nallasiddhi of Nellore. The date of that battle is given as A.D. 863 which is no doubt, erroneous; probably it occurred in the 13th century. The family apparently rose to a position of some power in the northern part of Nellore district. They do not seem to be mentioned in any of the heretofore-published inscriptions. See note under K.R. 26.

Yeddu Mummaya Bagádingáru is not mentioned elsewhere.

Hail! On Saturday, the 10th of the dark fortnight of Pushya of the year Sádháraṇa, corresponding to 1292 of the illustrious Ṣaka era, Anapóti Náyuṇḍu presented an oil mill to Gangéṣvaradéva for providing an oil bath (for the god) for the religious merit of his uncle Bári Náyuḍu, and his aunt Núnkasáni.

Whoever causes obstruction by not maintaining this oil mill will incur the sin of killing children near the great Ganges. Those who protect (it) will acquire merit.

V. 1. May the staff-like tusk of Hari, the sportive Boar, protect you—resting on which (the tusk), the earth with mount Méru as its apex appeared like an umbrella.

May well-being be conferred on you by the heap of wet rice placed by Brahma on the head of Śambhu (Śiva) at the time of (his) marriage with Gaurí (Párvatí) which grain, resembling a collection of pearls issuing from a pearl oyster, seems as though it had developed into the Moon and his wives.

Hail! On Monday, the 10th of the bright fortnight of Jyéshṭha of the year Sádháraṇa, corresponding to the Śrí Śaka year 1232, while (Hail!) Pratápa Rudradéva Mahárája, who is the ornament of the Kákati race which is renowned in the whole world, was ruling the earth, Śrímat Dévari Náyaningáru whose columnar arms are of peerless might, who is Chalamarti gaṇḍa, who has caused to fade the plantain flower which is the fame of hostile kings with the heat of his excessive valour, who is a master of polity, the hero of the world, who has cut down hostile kings with his sharp sword in the fury of the battle field, who is eulogized as Trinétra, who is honoured by intelligent men, who is the ocean of gems, to wit, noble qualities, who is the Vírabhadra of the Kaliyuga, who is a host of suns to the darkness of hostile armies, who is the champion over treacherous people (Dróhara gaṇḍa ?) by whom the consort of Párvatí (i.e. Śiva) is constantly worshipped, who is the excellent son of Śríman Máchaya Náyaka and who is a sun to the lotuses which are poets, set up (the images of) Gauríśvara, Sómeśvara and Mahádéva in the shape of three peaks (by constructing temples with three pinnacles) at Kottacherla and Mácherla.

Having appointed Dálamu Varadanna and Tammalla Peddini as priests, he granted the following vritti fields with libation of water as sarvamányas free from all burdens and taxes for (providing) decorations to the deities (here follows a list of the vrittis), also a pullari mányam (a grant of pasture land free of tax?) for the cattle belonging to the deity, the sunkam as a sarvamánya (evidently a grant of the proceeds of some tax) the tax raised from Kómiṭis (Bachchulu) on shops daily at dra (?) $\frac{1}{4}$ of $\frac{3}{4}$ or $\frac{3}{16}$ as a sarvamánya. The rulers have given all these. Méras should be collected from every village in the country at 1 túm on every heap of grain, and in towns, such as Krottacherla, &c., where taxes are levied on merchandize at nu (?) $\frac{1}{4}$ + 1 on every headload of all kinds of grain. They should on the whole (average) be collected at 1 ta (?), and at du (?) $\frac{1}{4}$ + 1. One ka (?) of land is given under the tank (?); grain at 1 puṭṭi should be collected at Rájépalli for the religious merit of Dévaṛi Náyuningáru. All this should be maintained as long as the sun and moon endure.

May there be prosperity!

[Three imprecatory verses.]

Adoration be to the Lord of Ṣríṣaila!

Adoration be to Tripurántaka Déva!

At Aḍavigudipáḍu .. ... 1 Ré (?) of wet land,

At Chandalúru ... ... $\frac{1}{2}$ Ré (?) of wet land are given by Dévaráyudu, Rámayya and Ti . . . . for (providing) sacred food to the deity.

Those who violate this will be considered to have killed a Brahman.

NOTE.—The latter portion is obscure.

Krottachera or Krottacherla is Kocherlakóṭa.

NOTE.—There is a rather interesting Sthalapuráṇa in the temple at Kocherlakóṭa which name, it appears, is a contraction for Kottacheruvulakóṭa. It begins with the remark that Mallikharjuna Gaṇapati ruled over the ṣíma of Singarikonḍa (Singaráyakonḍa?) with Manginapúḍi (Mangyanapúḍi?) as his capital. He was succeeded by his son Gajapati, who, in the year Manmatha, corresponding to the Ṣaka year 918, built the fort Kottacheruvulakóṭa, laying it out so as to correspond with the area over which his dogs had been chased by a hare. He then amalgamated the ṣímas of Dévarakonḍa and Santa Singarikonḍa which formed (part of?) the country known as Yeruvanáḍu and styled the new territory Kochcherlakóṭa Ṣíma. He dwelt in his new fort for a short while and then went to Telingána. Gajapati's son was Mukkanṭi who ruled over Kaḷinga and appointed Mallaparáju, the karnam of Kochcherlakóṭa, to be his representative there, with Póliredḍi as commandant of the fort. Sometime afterwards Pratápa Rudra invaded Kochcherlakóṭa Síma with nine lakhs of archers and besieged the fort for thirteen years. In the course of the siege the gallant karnam, the commandant, and one Bhaṭṭu sallied out and in a severe battle killed eleven chiefs but were themselves slain. Then follows a song sung by the body-guard (భటులు) in honour of the karnam.

The story goes on that Pratápa Rudra then obtained possession of Kochcherlakóṭa and granted the position of Sthala Karnam of the síma to Káḷamráju, son-in-law of Pavani Yugandharuḍu who was minister to Pratápa Rudra's son. Afterwards one Turumeḷḷa Abburáju was associated with Káḷamráju by an edict issued by Pratápa Rudra on Sunday the 15th of the bright fortnight of Márgaṣira of the year Vikriti, corresponding with the Ṣaka year 1033. Pratápa is here described as the son of Kákaṭarudra and grandson of Ṣiva Dévaka Oḍayalu and as ruling at Orugallu. It appears that he presented on this occasion to the joint sthala karnams a town which he had founded under the name of Pratáparudrasamudram and Manginapúḍi "which has existed from ancient days." He also gave them the four villages of Gajjalakonḍa, Kámepalli, Dévarakonḍa and Peddavaram subject to payment of 300 máḍas (a year ?).

Pratápa Rudra is said to have reigned for 24 years and to have been succeeded by his son Haripálaka who reigned for 8 years.

Subsequently "in the year Dundubhi, corresponding to 1065 of the Ṣaliváhana Ṣaka era, the Gajapati family again wanted to rule over these lands" and in the year Raktákshi, corresponding to the Ṣaka year 1067, their minister, Góparáju Rámanna, made certain grants and confirmed Rudra's edict in favour of the two sthala karnams. He is said to have "reigned" for 38 years and it would follow that the descendants of Pratápa Rudra must have been ousted in Ṣaka 1065 from this territory by the descendants of the old rulers.

The puráṇa goes on that in Vikári or 1102 Ṣaka, Polaya Vémareḍḍi of the Góna family, came to the throne and that he built the temples in Ṣríṣaila and reigned for 12 years. He was followed by his son Anapóta Bhúpatireḍḍi who reigned for 30 years and by his grandson Ana Vémareḍḍi who reigned for 15 years. The last-named's son Komára Vémareḍḍi followed with a reign of 25 years and his son Korivémareḍḍi with a reign of 4 years. The last-named was followed by his son Komaragirireḍḍi who reigned 14 years. "These Reḍḍis ruled for a period of 100 years" and, all this time, the sthala karnamship was being held by generation after generation of the Káḷamráju and Turimaḷḷa families. We now come to Pramádi, corresponding to the Ṣaka year 1222, when the "Ráyulaváru" are said to have been reigning. Achyutadévaráyulu is said to have reigned "for sometime" as did his son Pravududévaráyulu and his grandson Narasimhadévaráyulu. The last-named's son Achchitadévaráyulu, "setting Krishṇadévaráyulu in front," [1] conquered extensively and ruled for some years. While he was on his way to Vijayanagaram with some idols, he chanced to visit Kochcherlakóṭa and was so pleased with it and the ancient temple built by Gajapatirájn that he also built a temple there and set up an image therein. He then went on to Vijayanagaram.

The puráṇa proceeds that Achyutadévaráyulu came to the throne at the end of the reign of Nṛisimhadévaráyulu and he sent for the edicts of Pratápa Rudra, had copper-plate grants issued in confirmation thereof, set up some stone edicts and confirmed certain gifts made by Poladu [2] "who once carried the State umbrella."

Afterwards one Singaráju filed a suit for the office of karnam against the Kálamráju and Turimaḷḷa families and the case was settled at Vijayanagaram before the "Ráyulu" in favour of the old families.

"Later on" Rámappayya, son-in-law of (Achyuta) Ráyulu, came to the throne and he reigned "for some time" and it is stated that the Ráyulu family ruled for 200 years.

We now come to Alamgir Pádisháh who came to the throne in Vikári, corresponding to the Ṣaka year 1402, and it seems that that monarch appointed one Ravilla Timma Náyuḍu to rule over this part of the country. The latter established his capital at Panchagullapáḍu in Kóṭa Ṣíma, ruled there and was succeeded by his son Venkaṭáḍri Náyuḍu who granted Kochcherlakóṭa as a jághir to six of his

[1] The Telugu is పురస్కరించుకొని. It apparently means "assisted by." Several Telugu Brahmans have stated that this is the meaning of the passage but possibly it merely means that Krishnaráya preceded him on the throne.

[2] This Póladu is said by tradition to have been granted for a time by a member of the Kákatiya family the right to use the royal seal and make grants. Probably he was the Polaya Vémareḍḍi who became independent of the Kákatiya dynasty in A.D. 1328 and founded the Reḍḍi dynasty (see p. 22, E. R. for 1899-1900).

relatives whose acts in founding suburbs, temples, etc., in and about Kochcherlakóṭa are described and the "Náyapanéni" family is said to have held sway there for many years, that family being apparently the family composed of the six related jághírdars.

The puráṇa then reverts to Venkaṭádri Náyuḍu who was succeeded by his son Malla Náyuḍu and his grandson Uddanda Malla Náyuḍu and at this time litigation for the sthala karnamship was renewed, this time by a faithless proxy, one Konḍappa, who had "stolen the danḍa kavila" (family chronicle), but the traitor was routed during the rule of Vengamanáyaniváru and the vigorous old families retained their cherished office.

"Then," goes on the puráṇa, "the Sarkar granted Arikaṭla Śíma for the maintenance of the Rávilla family and annexed and kept the remainder of the kingdom" (whatever that may mean).

We now come to Vikriti corresponding to S.S. 1513 when "Sherlashá Dágir Kodávaddi (Khuda-u-din) Sultán Khájalálukhál," Jaghirdar of Murtijánagar (?) and Cuddapah, acquired, (on behalf of "Kadakusháh" of Golkonḍa), Vinukonḍa, Bellamkonḍa, and Murtijánagar from "Kodávaddi" and also the 18 Parganas of Khamman Sarkar of Cuddapah Subha, viz., Khamman (Kambham), Dupáḍu, Yeruva, Márella, Pálnáḍu, Kárempúḍi, Tumurugóḍu, Tangéḍu Mácherla, Gurzala, Panchamahal, Podili, Kóṭa, Darsi, Pelluru, Chímakurti, Addanki, Ammanabrólu and Kandukúru. These were divided among various great Kháns who failed to pay the vanji (tribute ?) and rebelled, but were suppressed by an army from Golkonḍa and "Málisham Muhammad Shásu" was placed in control of the country. He was afterwards removed in favour of "Singini Nilandánu," appointed on behalf of Muhammad Darkhini (Dakhani) Pádisháh. He was followed by Shaikh Muhammad Khán who demolished the temples in Podili. Then came Makkili, then Abhiryárámarázu, then Muhammad Khásim Khán Góri, then Miṭṭakonḍaráju, then Sambaráyuniváru, then Chinna Kopparáju, then Mangaráju, then Purushottamaráju, then Sámbarájn then Rámaráju, then Velagaráyaniváru. This brings us to Durmukhi or S.S. 1604 when, during the reign of Táneshá, Akkanna, Mádanna and Suryaprakáṣa Rao, one Jillalla Mangaparáju held the local governorship (?). He was followed by Barige Undanda Ráo and he by Pidila Lingappa Pantulu and he by Kónéṭi Ráo. During all this time the two families of Káḷamrázu and Turimalla held the sthala karnamship. The next governor was Chalichelamala Jayaváru Reḍḍi who built a fort in Kochcherlakóṭa and refused to pay tribute and was consequently turned out in favour of Damera Biṭṭha Náyuḍu and Vengama Náyuḍu and was beheaded by the Sarkar in Krodhana corresponding to the S.S. year 1608.

Here the puráṇa ends after professing to trace the local history for nearly 700 years. It will be observed that, according to the puráṇa, for nearly 600 years the office of sthala karnam never passed out of the hands of the two families on whom it was originally bestowed.

See note in App. I about this purána.

May there be prosperity! Hail! On the 11th of the bright fortnight of Márgaśira of the year Vijaya, correponding to the year 1455 of the illustrious, victorious and prousperous Śáliváhana Śaka era, Chintagunṭa Chennamaráju, having constructed a temple to Janárdanadéva of Kocherlakóṭa for the religious merit of Mannárappa Náyanimgáru, set up the image of Janárdanadéva and gave a paddy field in rear of the Nágulacheruvu and two dry fields in Muddapáḍu village for the performance of the marriage festival and for providing food (amṛitapaḍi) for the deity to last as long as the sun and moon exist.

We have given with libation of water . . . dry field, a (half?) paddy field under the tank of (Netya . . . . nunala?); one-half of a maḍi (wet field) under the tank Asna Gangala, in all 2 wet maḍis.

May the deity enjoy these fields for his amṛitapaḍi (food) as long as the sun and moon exist, with the eight powers and enjoyments, to wit, treasures, hidden deposits, trees, minerals, akshini and ágámi, actuals and outstandings.

Whoever be the ruler of Kocherlakóṭa, if he does not maintain amṛitapaḍi for the deity, he will incur the śin of killing cows and Brahmans near the Ganges.

[1] Note.—The Manager of the Kalahasti Estate has sent us a translation of an inscription of Ṣrí Ranga Rája dated in the 'Thathu' year (?) corresponding to S.S. 1489. (Probably the year Dhátá and S.S. 1499 should be read.) Ranga Rája was then reigning at Chandragiri and the boundaries of his kingdom are described as follows:— "The village Padunathi and remarkable dry rivers on the east; the village Pillusrí with its sacred fig tree and the other important village Audalimala with the river Lavana kuri close by on the north; on the south-west the river Chekkangaguni and the western sea and Durgaráyapatnam with its 'caldera' (screw pine?) grove and also the village Nithimakulu; and on the north-eastern and western sides of this Samasthánam there are, on the west, a small tank and the village Tirumúr near the village of Samativatari and, on the north-east, the villages of Mamuluki and Vengalapuram." So the translation given us runs but the cardinal points are evidently wrongly rendered; for east we should apparently read west, for north, south and so on. Durgaráyapatnam is plainly Duggarázupaṭnam, a village on the coast in Gudur taluk and Vengalapuram and Tirumúr are in the Tiruvallúr taluk of Chingleput. The other boundaries of the kingdom we do not trace.

Hail! Prosperity! In the expired Śaka year 1178 corresponding to the 13th year of the reign of the emperor of the three worlds, the glorious Vírarájéndra-chóḷadéva, on the date corresponding to Saturday with the nakshatra Róhini, the thirteenth day of the bright half of the month of Mahara, all the men of the town of Kollatturai alias Gaṇḍagópálapaṭṭana and the foreigners of the eighteen countries, having assembled together at the sacred flower garden of Désnáyakan attached to the temple of Chandirattiraipiḷḷaiyár, gave to the god Manumasiddhéśvara of this town money (amount not clear owing to the portion being mutilated) (to be spent as follows):— . . . .

$\frac{1}{4}$ chinnam for upper and lower female cloths.

1 máḍai for a vessel.

1 máḍai for sacred ashes.
$\frac{1}{4}$ máḍai for cloth.
$\frac{1}{4}$ máḍai for vidava (not understood).
$\frac{1}{2}$ máḍai for kalava (not understood).
$\frac{1}{2}$ chinnam for kámarasavalli (not understood).

We all—the townsmen (of Kollatturai) and the foreigners of the eighteen countries, gave the above, agreeing to continue (them) as long as the moon and sun last.

This (charity) is (placed under) the protection of all the Máhésvaras.

In the thirteenth year (of the reign of the above mentioned king), Urúḍaiyán Maḍapaḷisvámi gave for sacred food to Tirupaḷḷiṟainácchiyár, (the goddess of the sacred bed-room), 300 kuḷis of arable land free of tax, to last as long as the moon, at Iruvuḷaváṅigi in Munaiyúr, (after) demarcating (the same) with stones.

In the 15th year (of the reign of the above mentioned king) under the order (according to the letter) of Manumasiddharasar, Âṇḍa . . . kiḷán (alias) Tiruvarangamuḍaiyár gave, free of tax, to the above mentioned goddess . . . of arable land.

In the 16th year (of the reign of the above mentioned king) Danmapálan gave to the above mentioned goddess . . kuḷis of arable land to be spent on the great night (Ṣivarátri).

NOTE.—The regnal year was first read as the 21st, but on check in situ seems to be the 13th. But the S.S. year also is not very clear.

Hail! Prosperity! In the expired Śaka year 1201 which corresponded to the 2nd year of the reign of the emperors of the three worlds, the glorious Irumaḍi Tirukkáḷattidéva, the merchants of the náḍus, towns, hills and the five maṇḍalams and all the five hundred foreigners (coming from) the other illustrious eighteen countries (residing in) Kóḷḷitturai alias Gaṇdagópálapaṭṭanam assembled at Tirukkávaṇam on the date (corresponding to) Saturday, the 10th day of the bright half of the month of Mína which bore the nakshatra Róhini. (According to their proposals) we gave for expenses connected with building, sacred food and ornaments for the god Manumasiddhíṣvara of this village, one-fourth per cent. on the appraised cost of all the bags exported and imported at this port.

We, all the merchants from the náḍus, towns, hills and five maṇḍalams and all the foreigners from all the eighteen countries, gave this one-fourth per cent. to be paid to this deity as long as the moon and sun last.

This (charity) is (placed under) the protection of all the Máhéṣvarás.

Hail ! Prosperity ! In the 26th year of the reign of the emperor of the three worlds, the glorious Kulottuṅga Choḷadéva, who was pleased to take Madurai and the crowned head of the Pánḍyan, I, Peddaraśar the son of Rájarájapaṭṭaivattiyarasar, the lord of the best of cities Ahischatra, the lord of the Phaṇámaṇḍala, Ṣivapádasékhara, who belonged to the pure Atríya gótra, gave to the god Subrahmanyapiḷḷaiyar at Tiruvánbúr (situated) in Kíḷa paṭṭaiyanáḍu in Paiyúriḷaṅgóṭṭam (a sub-division) of Jayankoṇḍachóḷamaṇḍalam, as temple lands, in the lands belonging to (the village of) Iṇaiyúr.

This land is bounded on the west by the big road of Rájarájan, on the north by the tank bund, on the east by the boundary of Árúr and on the south by the boundary of Kongil. I, Peddarasan, the son of Rájarájapaṭṭavattiyarasar gave all the lands enclosed within the above-mentioned four boundaries, wherever the monitor lizard runs and the tortoise creeps, demarcated with stones as temple land, with all the taxes taken off, to last as long as the moon and the sun, the same being engraved in stone.

Those who cause hindrance to this charity shall incur the sin of killing a tawny cow on the banks of the Ganges.

The feet of those who protect this charity are on my head.

This (charity is placed under) the protection of all the Máhéśvaras.

NOTE.—Among the mean and miserable religious edifices of Nellore, the Subramanya temple at Mallam or, rather, the Maṇḍapam thereof may pass as ornate. The Telugu people seem never to have possessed the architectural skill of the Tamils. The original type of temple in Nellore seems to be a plain oblong building with a roof slightly barrelled externally and containing a cell faced by a few squat pillars. Sometimes the outer wall is broken up into pillars; oftener the wall is solid. We take the opportunity to suggest that the well-known Amalaka ornamentation which is common here as elsewhere is a representation of the common pumpkin known here as gummaḍi káya (Cucurbita maxima).

Mallam.

The Subramanya temple at Mallam is covered with Tamil inscriptions, all of which have been translated. Some have been given above. The rest relate merely to grants of land, money, lamps and so on and it would be a waste of labour to print them in extenso. A summary is given below. The village is described as Tiruvánbúr, situated in Okkáṭṭunáḍu in Kíḻaippaṭṭaiyanáḍu in Paiyúrilaṅgoṭṭam, a sub-division of Jayankoṇḍacholamaṇḍalam.

Hail! Prosperity! In the 36th year of the reign of the emperor of the three worlds, Tribhuvanavíradéva, I, Sittaraśan, the son of the provincial chief of the middle country (mattimadésam) Rájarájapaṭṭaipettaraśan, presented one sacred lamp in the temple of the lord Panḍaraṅga (situated in) Pérúrnádu in Pavvattirikóṭṭam (a subdivision) of Rájéndracholamaṇḍalam, as charity on behalf of my elder sister Páchchaldéví the consort of Madurántakappottapichóḷa (alias) Manumasittarasan.

* * * *

(For this lamp) I, Rájarájapaṭṭaisittarasa, gave the tax on vémugar (?) the tax on house front (doors), the tax on looms, the tax on goldsmiths, and the temple dues on the garden lands.

We three, the Śiva Brahmans of the temple, Paṇḍaraṇgabhaṭṭa, Nárṟpattennáyirabhaṭṭa and Paṇmáhéśvarabhaṭṭa, having bound ourselves to pay the interest on this gold and maintain a sacred perpetual lamp as long as the moon and sun last, have received (the money).

Those who obstruct this charity will incur the sin of stabbing a tawny cow on the banks of the Ganges.

(This charity is placed under) the protection of all the Máhéśvaras.

This inscription is mutilated at the end so that the object of the grant is not ascertainable. It begins with a short Sanskrit introduction which says that it is the grant of Chitraméla (perhaps a surname of Śrí Vijayagaṇḍágópáladéva) for the good of all the world. The inscription is dated in the 19th year of the reign of the king Vijayagaṇḍagópáladéva and the date is the 13th day of the bright half of the month of Kaṭaka nakshatra Púśa.

The charitable edict granted by Jóvipallikha Narasingamanáyaningáru to Jangam Pápaya, the priest of Sangaméṣvara, on Thursday, the 11th of the bright fortnight of Chaitra of the year Vyaya. We have given land—1,000 kuṇṭas of dry waste land, as measured with a pole three feet in length, in the field named Pulivágucchépu chénu in the southern fields of Chenupalli in Chundi Ṣíma which Koṇḍamarusayya was pleased to grant to us as an amaram, with libation of water, for providing amritapaḍi (sacred food) to Sangaméṣvara (whose temple is) on the sacred river at the confluence of the rivers Kshíra (Páléru) and Mákéru.

They (the donees) should utilize the eight species of enjoyment and ownership with respect to this land for the deity three times a day and enjoy them as long as the sun and moon last. Those who fail to keep up this charity will be regarded as having broken their word (?) and trangressed the regulations of their caste and (the precepts of) their spiritual preceptors; they will incur the guilt of committing sins such as cow-slaughter and Brahmanicide on the banks of the Ganges. The righteous people who protect this charity will have increase of life, health, wealth and progeny, and live for many Brahmakalpas (cycles of Brahma).

[Two of the usual imprecatory verses.]

May it cause great prosperity!

NOTE.—Chenupalli is doubtless the earlier name of Chenupádu. Koṇḍamarusayya is Ráyasam K. the governor of Udayagiri. The grant of Chundi Sima to a stranger indicates the complete suppression of the Reḍḍi line which ruled at Chundi.

Fourth side.

He provided for daily offerings and worship with a lamp and arranged the performance of annual festivals. (The temple of) Chuṇḍi Janárdana Svámi being in ruins since the days of the Reḍḍis (Reḍḍi dynasty) he had the temple plastered with chunam set up the deity in the temple and founded an endowment for daily offering and worship with lamps. He founded festivals.

NOTE.—In K.R. 20 we have Káminéni Muttarázu who was apparently the son of the Polinéni mentioned here. The granter of the amaram must be Muhammad Kuli Kutb Sháh of Golkonḍa. The inscription shows that by the beginning of the 17th century the Mussalmans had obtained the sovereignty over the northern part of the district. The use of the name Káminéni seems to show connection with the family of the present Zamíndárs of Chuṇḍi. That estate dates its existence as a jághír or amaram from 1487 (vide p. 724 of the District Manual). It may perhaps be regarded as the last surviving fragment in Nellore district of the old Reḍḍi kingdom.

KANDUKUR (15).

[Old Chundi. Sanskrit in Telugu character. From a stone outside Rámalingasvámi temple.]

TRANSLATION.

1. May the Boar protect the earth—the god, the lord who sportively supported the earth with his tusk [1]

2. (Some letters are illegible and the meaning is not clear; the words seem to be an invocation to Śiva who has the moon on his crest.) [2]

3. Just as the Brahmans, Kshatriyas and others were born from the body—the mouth, arms, thigh and feet—of Vishnu, the Panta race arose from his foot.

---

[1] Portion of this verse is illegible. [2] Only a few words are legible.

4. From the milky ocean of the Panṭa race arose Alla (read Anna?) Bhúpati, whose enemies were crushed by his columnar arms and who honours his kindred.

5. By his son Véma, excellent king, victorious, the vanquisher of foes, who ruled the earth, Kali (Yuga) was made Kritayuga (the first or golden age),

6. Who was Jayanta (son of Indra) by his beauty, Vasanta (spring) in causing delight to men, Yama in battle, Révanta (son of the sun) in horsemanship.

7. The sky seemed as if it were adorned with the rays of the autumnal moon which was his fame; he gave beauty to the moon which has a spot on it (?) [1]

8. He had eleven sons, very intelligent, best of men, resembling Rudra in valour, accomplished in (making) gifts; the most excellent in all qualities. Amongst them one was known as Malla Bhúpa who resembled Káma in beauty, and who was firm in truth; who was like the lord of the rivers (ocean) in depth (magnanimity), and the earth in patience; always devoted to the worship of Śiva, who was as it were another Vishnu in valour.

9. The treasurer and servant of that king was Śrí Kóna Singaya Śréshti (Kómaṭi), the best of merchants, always devoted to the worship of Śiva,

10. Devoted to the worship of Hara (Śiva), fond of stories of Sadáṣiva (or, always fond of stories of Śiva), truthful in speech, upright in character, renowned for having founded a settlement of his castemen (in that locality),

11. By him this two-roomed mansion of Umésvara (?) was caused to be constructed by the residents of the town of Chundi for the delight (merit) of his father who was in heaven.[1]

---

[1] This verse is rather obscure; the reading is uncertain.

12. In the year Raktákshi, in the month of Chaitra, on the great tithi, viz., the 2nd, (he) gave for securing enjoyment (in heaven), renunciation, &c., to last as long as the sun and moon endure.

13. This village has been given to Bhímésalinga to last as long as the earth consisting of seven continents lasts, and as long as the seven mountains endure.

The protection of this charity should be maintained by all kings; this charity must be protected by those like you.

14, 15, 16. [Imprecatory verses.]

17. Next the description of the fields (granted) is written in the Telugu language.[2]

KANDUKUR (16). (A.D. 1430–31.)

[Old Chundi. Telugu. From three sides of a stone in front of Kámákshamma temple.]

TRANSLATION.

First side.

Hail! On Thursday, the 11th of the bright fortnight of Phálguna of the year Sádháraṇa, under the Vṛishabha (Ṛishabha) lagna, corresponding to the illustrious Ṣaka year 1352, Kommana Sómayájulu, who is the prime minister (Pradháni) of Kómaṭi Reḍḍi, the son of Ṣrígiri Reḍḍi; who (Kommana) is of the Maitrávaruṇa Gótra, and of the Ápastambha Sútra, who is the grandson of Dúbagunṭa Máramaráju, who is the son of Rámaráju and Brammasáni, and the younger brother of Bairavanna, Mádhavanna, Déchana, and Narahari, and who is the disciple of Amala Bhárata, with the help of his sons Rámachandra and Náráyaṇadévara, who were born to him of his wedded wife Lakkamámba, brought a Svayambhu Linga (a natural linga) from the Pátálaganga at Ṣríṣaila to the sacred place where he had performed the two sacrifices "Agnishṭoma" and "Atirátri," between the Tumiléru and the Tompéru (two streams) in the town of Chundi, to the north of Chundi fort, and set it up as Yajnéṣvaradéva. This Kommana Sómayájulu caused to be built a stone temple and a maṇḍapa for this deity. He set up all around this deity (images of) Vighnéṣvara, Durgá, Gópáladéva and Bhairavadéva, and caused to be erected stone temples for these deities. He planted in that place (two) sacrificial stone pillars for marking the two sacrifices performed by him. He planted a grove all round the prákára of that deity (Yajnéṣvara), caused to be built a sacrificial fire-place on the north-west of it, and founded an endowment for providing all enjoyments to that deity.

The sons of the aforesaid Kómaṭi Reḍḍi, viz., Tippaya Reḍḍi, ditto (i.e., Tippaya) Śrígiranna, Rámayya, Dévará-yuṇḍu, Náráyanadévara—granted the following lands, with libation of water, in the presence of Virúpákshadéva, who is on the banks of the Tungabhadra: 3 puṭṭis of dry land in Chuṇḍi; 30 túms of dry land in Lingamguṇṭa; 2 marutus of wet land in Chuṇḍi in rear of the Prólasamudram tank; and 1 túm on every harvested heap of all kinds of grain in Chuṇḍi and its hamlets, in Lingamguṇṭa and in Mompáḍu; to the aforesaid Gópáladéva: a dry field of 30 túms and a marutu of wet field in Chuṇḍi;

to the aforesaid Vighnéśvara, Durgá, and Bhairava—3 puṭṭis of dry land in Chuṇḍi at 1 puṭṭi each; so that the deities may enjoy the eight powers of ownership in them as long as the sun and moon exist.

Second side.

Therefore may every one maintain this charity and not let it go to ruin. Those who obstruct this charity will incur the sin of killing excellent cows and Brahmans on the Ganges.

[One imprecatory verse.]

The good services rendered by Kommana Sómayájulu are: a fresh water well with stone revetment in Kandukúr to the north behind the tank; the tank constructed between Kandukúr and Kóvúr, a well with stone revetment and a grove; a reservoir constructed at the northern end of the bund; a tank constructed to the east of Chuṇḍi; a well and fig trees planted there; the setting up of Viśvéśvaralinga and his temple at the northern end of Chuṇḍi Prólasamudram tank bund, the fresh water well sunk by Kommana Sómayájulu in the path to the north of Chuṇḍi fort for the religious merit of his son Hariharanátha (probably deceased). The works caused to be done by Rámachandra, son of the aforesaid Sómayájulu are: the dome of the temple of Núkanamma of Chuṇḍi; the tank constructed in that village to the north of the hill, and the fig trees planted there. The works caused to be done by his (Rámachandra's) younger brother Nárapuráju are: the Chuṇḍi fort; a tank constructed to the west of the fort connecting Pálanaravakoṇḍa and Manyamkoṇḍa (two hills near Chuṇḍi) a well and a grove there.

Third side.
